ALPINE LAY.

*Mid loftiest Alps God's majesty is spread!
The dawn he painteth red,
The floweret white and blue,
And washeth them with dew.
*Mid loftiest Alps a loving Father dwells.
*Mid loftiest Alps sweet herbs profusely grow;
The genial gales that blow,
Health on their wings convey;
The breath of God are they!
*Mid loftiest Alps a loving Father dwells.
*Mid loftiest Alps the fostering sun the while Maketh the vales to smile,
The glacier's frozen brow
With rainbow hues to glow:
*Mid loftiest Alps a loving Father dwells.
*Mid loftiest Alps the bleating flocks each day
Across the mountains stray.
Fresh pastures still they find,
And plenty leave behind:
*Mid loftiest Alps a loving Father dwells.
*Mid loftiest Alps gush streams of silver sheen
The yawning cliffs between;
Fearless the chamois stand
And drink from God's right hand!
*Mid loftiest Alps a loving Father dwells.
*Mid loftiest Alps in peace the shepherd lives;
He knows that he who gives
His tender lambs to feed,
Their master too will heed.
*Midst loftiest Alps a loving Father dwells.

REMARKS

By Pres. D. H. Wells, Tabernacle, Oct. 16, 1859.

[REPORTED BY G. D. WATT.]

Brethren and sisters, I arise before you this afternoon without having any particular subject on my mind upon which to speak, hoping and believing that the Lord will help me, that I may say what I shall say to your edification and comfort.

"Mormonism" presents themes sufficient for our consideration at all times, and upon all occasions. We never need be at a loss for a subject, for there is no part of it that we can contemplate that is not fitting and suitable to almost any occasion that may arise.

I feel that the principles of the holy gospel are all absorbing. In them is concentrated all my hopes of happiness, my life, my business, all my interests, both temporal and spiritual, in time and eternity; and I trust, will ever be. There is nothing else that I esteem worthy to engage my attention in comparison, and I have no hopes outside of my interest in this kingdom, neither do I wish to have.

When I embraced "Mormonism" I let go everything else, and since then I have had no wish or desire but to attend to those things required at my hands. I take peculiar pleasure and delight in doing anything that is for the advancement of this kingdom.

I feel an ardent anxiety to see Israel arise triumphant over every opposing object that may lie in its onward course. With me it is hosanna and glory to God when Israel obtains a single victory; it is Israel forever all the time.

These are a part of my feelings with regard to this work.

I expect one of the distinguishing features between the Latter Day Saints and the sectarian world is, that they feel so devoted to the cause they have espoused that they are willing to pass through any amount of suffering, even to the loss of their lives, to subserve its interests.

The outsiders look on the devotedness of the Latter Day Saints to this cause and kingdom, with great astonishment. There is a reason for this devotedness—they know nothing about. They cannot conceive how men should let their religion occupy their whole affections.

How is it in the United States? They have no confidence in their religious leaders. Have they any in their God? I do not wish to be severe in my strictures on them. They virtually say to their religious leaders, stand there and do not dare to interfere with our temporal affairs, or interfere with us in any way except in religious matters. They look upon them as their spiritual leaders only.

The world generally have an idea, and it is too true with many of the Latter Day Saints, that they know better about their every day affairs than the Lord. They even go so far as to exclude religious teachers from holding offices in their political circles. They do not elevate their religious ministers to the civil offices of the country.

Would not we, as a people, be willing to let the Lord dictate our affairs temporally and spiritually? This is a distinguishing feature, I say, between the Latter Day Saints and the rest of the world; they are not willing the Lord should dictate their temporal affairs, and we profess to be willing he should.

If ever we are prospered exceedingly we will have to submit ourselves to His dictation, temporally, because he is building up a temporal kingdom on the earth as well as a spiritual kingdom in the last days. He is gathering the people together from the four quarters of the earth, that He may concentrate a power to bring forth His purposes in the last days, that He may magnify His name in the earth; that He may have a people who will do as He wishes them, that He may exalt and bless them.

The Lord takes us through many channels, through a checkered path to bring us to the position to be capable and worthy to receive the blessings he is desirous to dispense to the children of men who will acknowledge him as having a right to rule on a portion of the earth at least, if not on the whole of it.

Has He not a right to rule on this earth? Who has done as much for us as our Lord and Savior? The prophets have intimated that all his enemies should be laid beneath his feet, that he should triumph over every opposing foe, and that the kingdoms of this world should be broken in pieces and become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ.

This is what we are expecting in this our day and generation. The work has commenced and we have become participants in it—citizens of the kingdom of God, if you please. This thought carries with it a joy and satisfaction to the soul of every true Saint, and to every person who is desirous of seeing righteousness obtain a foothold on the earth and wickedness walked underfoot.

This is what makes the people of God so enthusiastic in regard to their religion; great blessings are held out to them in having the Lord to reign over them, in being submissive to his will in all things, and thereby doing the work he has allotted them to do in the last days.

It is very encouraging to the Saints to know and realize that this duty and privilege rests on their shoulders. The Lord in his kindness has enlightened their minds to see the ripening of the work he has commenced and will perform.

The world cannot understand the work in which we are engaged. They look upon this church as another sect or persuasion of people. In one sense we are. Our forms of worship are similar to theirs; but this abiding faith they do not have. We have something to cling to about which they know nothing; which their doctrines do not teach. The blessings we enjoy they think of as being a great way off—something to be hoped for but not expected. We understand things they do not, therefore we have great cause to rejoice and offer thanksgiving and praise to our God. We have great cause to be industrious and active in the discharge and full performance of our duties, and to concentrate our interests in this kingdom and in its advancement.

Let that be our daily work; let us have no other business—nothing that shall come between us and our duty in regard to this. Let not the evil one place any barrier between us and our daily righteous walk.

It is the duty of each and every one of the Saints to feel that share of responsibility that belongs to them. Upon our shoulders the kingdom rests and the Lord is perfectly willing to roll it forth so fast as he shall have a people that are willing and capable to bear it off. Let us not be impatient if things do not come about as fast as we wish to see them; for, let me assure you, if the Lord were to answer our desires with respect to this, we should not be able to bear up under it. So fast as he can get a people who will be able to bear the kingdom off, he will roll it onward.

The people of God must strengthen their knees, gird up their loins, endeavor to have their faith increased by living nearer to the Lord and by shaking off the evil one.

There are too many among us who shake hands with the devil and, while this is so, the Lord cannot bless this people as he wants to bless them. Were he to pour out the multiplicity of blessings he has in store upon them now, it would send many of them to destruction; otherwise His great blessings will save them when they understand them. It is necessary we should live near to the Lord.

I am not obliged to mingle with evil because it surrounds me. An Elder whose duty calls him into the gentile world can keep himself as pure and as holy as he was in the midst of the Saints. He may enwrap himself as in a cloak against every evil that would surround his footsteps.

It is in the power of every man to resist the devil and he will flee from him; he will not take possession of any man's heart unless he makes him a welcome inhabitant and invites him to share in his affections.

It is in the power of every man and every woman not to give way to evil thoughts and speak evil against their neighbors. If they do this, the first thing they know they are overcome. They will think evil in the first place and, if they encourage the evil thoughts, they will finally give utterance to them; and when they do this they are still further from the true path than before and so they go on until they are overtaken by apostacy, which they did not think of when they commenced this course.

Every one has their own peculiar feelings, and it is well enough for people to be courteous one to another; but suppose a thing is done that comes across our natural feelings and judgment a little; why should we set our judgment to be above that of our brethren? Why should one man suppose he knows better than anybody else? Why not yield at once to the superior judgment of another? And if another man's view is not as good as your own, what of it? Let us lay aside our judgment and let our neighbor have his way in regard to matters that do not particularly concern us. Why not, rather than contend?

If we encourage a spirit of contention, we shall fall into darkness. Why not take a course to live in the light? The result will show which is the best.

Let us all be for the kingdom. Another man's policy for the kingdom may be just as good as mine. If you are called upon to act in a particular place, act in it until you shall be displaced, and act in it according to the best light and judgment you have, though another might go about the same thing differently. Let us, however, sustain that man who is appointed to act and act with him, so long as he is honest and sincere within. If all the people in this city and in other settlements could see this, there would be less contention.

I have seen good men get at variance in the outside settlements because their Bishops did not do as they thought they ought, and I have seen Bishops removed and others put in their places, and they would do exactly the same things in their own way.

I feel like being generous. I feel like letting men go about a thing in their own way to benefit the people and the kingdom. Let us look a little beyond the surface, and see a benefit in another man's policy as well as our own, and think that another man has got a little common sense as well as ourselves.

In this way, I think, there would be a great deal less to find fault with; and then we can see and appreciate the policy of our brother that is as desirous of doing well, even as we are. Then we should get rid of a certain thing called envy, which very frequently besets some people.

I would like to see my brethren learn wisdom. I would like to have more myself. I would like to have them increase in the knowledge of God, in things pertaining to eternal life, as well as in things pertaining to our every day life and business, and thus let us learn to save ourselves daily, that we may be saved with a full salvation at last.

It is not the great things of the kingdom that cause men to fall away and go to destruction. It is the small things of life—matters of traffic and deal—upon which people stumble. Large mountains are magnified from small mole hills and they loom out greater and greater the longer persons travel in that path.

If I do not want one of my wives or children to go to the devil; if I do not wish them to be overcome by evil, I consider it my duty to keep them out of the way of evil and not suffer them to visit places and company that would be likely to lead them astray.

Suppose I place myself and family under the power of influences that are from the devil; influences that are calculated to lead us into darkness and apostacy; or if I have characters about my house who are filthy, wicked; who curse God and use profane language, having no respect for my religion, for God, for angels and holy beings; how far do you think I shall be held responsible, should one of my family go into apostacy through this influence which I have thrown around them? would I be held responsible or not?

How far is that mother responsible for her daughter when she surrounds her with influences that are calculated to lead her astray and into darkness? How far can the father be held responsible for the future conduct of his daughters, after surrounding them with pernicious influences and they should, in consequence thereof, fall away.

It appears to me as tho' persons in pretty good faith, who think they may stand themselves, will be held responsible for many of these things. It seems to me if I surrounded my family with evil influences and they were led astray thereby, I should have nobody else to blame for it but myself.

It is true sons and daughters may go contrary to fathers and mothers' counsel, and parents employ every means in their power to keep them from wandering into by and forbidden paths.

Under these circumstances they may not be considered responsible; but when parents place bad influences around their children or introduce them into their houses, I look quite differently upon the matter of responsibility.

Even at the present time, many are caused to mourn; they have real sorrow of heart in consequence of their own unjudiciousness, of their want of thought and good understanding; they now see where they have missed it; and many a heart will yet sorrow for not pursuing a different course.

Let us not forget these important items, but have our minds stirred up to them, and be careful as to what kind of influences we surround our families with. Let the mother be careful what kind of company she lets her daughter keep. This is the way to preserve their own hearts from bitter sorrow, and their daughters from degradation and death. How far will the father of that young man be held responsible whose pernicious practices has led him to drunkenness?

I like to have liquor in my house for family use, in case of sickness; and if I could have have my own feelings gratified, I would always have it in my house; but I would rather forego all the benefit it would do my family than to see any member of this church and kingdom or any true friend of mine lead into drunkenness and into death. I would rather that not a drop more should ever be manufactured, from this time forth, than it should be the means of destroying one soul.

If my influence and words could blot out of existence the excessive use of it, I would do so. When I see otherwise faithful and intelligent men overcome and rendered perfectly useless by the intemperate use of ardent spirits, I feel like saying never let a drop more be made, but let it go entirely out of existence; but when I reflect I see it is like other temptations of the devil; men must know the evil as well as the good.

This is all right, and it is to try them, whether they will show their integrity by wallowing in the mire or by using it without abusing themselves by it. If men who have an appetite formed for it overcome it, so much greater will be their reward; but if they subject themselves to it, it becomes their lord and master. We see a good many who are controlled by it.

I despise this abominable practice; at the same time, men must have their agency and do as they please. If the holy influences of the gospel will not fetch them out of it, I do not know anything that will.

I do not expect any reward for being tempted with ardent spirits; for I have no disposition to be tempted by it; I have no liking for it, although I could be benefited by the use of it in the way I would use it; but I would rather forego that for my brethren's sake. I have not that evil desire to overcome; I have other things to overcome, but this is no besetting sin of mine.

May God bless us and help us to triumph over sin, is my prayer in the name of Jesus: AMEN.

The Site of St. Petersburg.

Those who imagine that Peter chose that site without consideration, or because he had derived his only ideas of a city from Amsterdam, with which, during his residence there, he had become familiar, form a too narrow estimate of that coarse but vigorous genius.

His ambition rose far beyond the country of which he found himself the master, and far beyond the day in which he expected to live. He placed before himself the map of the world; he saw that Europe, Asia and America converge towards the North Pole, and that Russia, situated on the point where their meridians meet, appeared to be their destined mistress. He formed the purpose of turning this assumed intention of the Creator into a fact, by successive conquests, to give the people the possession of three worlds, and by the opening of rivers, canals and caravans, to form the remotest regions into a single state.

With such an idea before him, the position of St. Petersburg was well chosen, although for the purposes of ordinary life nothing could well be worse. There they tremble upon a great subterranean scaffolding, "ready," as I have heard it graphically said, "to sink into the marsh like a stage-ghost through a trap door," with a climate so destructive to buildings that the glittering exterior which we have just surveyed has to be renewed every summer at enormous cost, with a neighborhood so difficult of drainage that no food can be raised without incredible labor, and in the forests of which (as I can testify, from having obtained and sent home the head of one of them) the wolves still prowl; and, above all, with the possibility suspended over them of a complete submergence beneath the surrounding waters; for whenever it shall happen that a powerful west wind shall blow during the fortnight that witnesses the breaking up of the ice, the tide of the Gulf of Finland will meet the tide of Lake Ladoga and, rising together, they will roll over the city, (no part of which rises fifteen feet above the ordinary level) when its palaces, monuments and temples, together with the 400,000 souls which constitute its population, will experience a fate not less terrible than that of Herculaneum and Pompeii. —[Gurney's Evening Recreations.

Mean Men

Hate paying taxes of any kind; yet rejoice in good roads, good bridges, and buildings for public business. They love to see hospitals open for the cure of the sick for they think it might be their unhappy lot to need their charity. They value good roads as much as those that willingly contribute for them. These are the men that usually dodge the tax gatherers. They are the first to complain about the enormous taxation and the last to notice public improvements that have been made by disbursing them.

Mean men should walk in the mud or pay a road tax in advance, and wade the rivers and not cross a bridge they could not help to erect. In fact men that won't pay taxes ought to dwell together and enjoy their own mud holes; ford their own waters until they were thoroughly tired of primitive habits—and yearned to live with public spirited men and enjoy the blessings of united labors in civilized society.
