CORRESPONDENCE.

ANOTHER INDIAN OUTRAGE.

BRIGHAM CITY, Sept. 27, 1860.

ED. NEWS—DEAR SIR:

Report reached this place last night of another Indian outrage upon a small party of emigrants from Illinois on their way to California, by Lander's Wagon Road Route.

Some two weeks ago, the company, mostly from Illinois, consisting of seven men, five women, about a half dozen children, four wagons and about 140 loose animals, besides their teams, passed the camp of the U. S. forces, stationed for the time being on the Portneuf river, in Washington Territory, near the old Fort Hall station. After traveling west, about ninety miles from the army station, while in camp at night, near the City Rocks, they were fired upon by a party of Indians, supposed to be about sixty in number. The emigrant forces were so feeble that but little hopes of effectual resistance was entertained. However, returning the fire of the enemy, they kept them from making a charge upon the camp that night, and gave the women and children an opportunity to retreat down a ravine, in the direction of the soldiers' encampment, which they did successfully.

An express was despatched immediately to the officer in command of the forces on the Portneuf, and a detachment of the troops, under command of Lieut. Sanders was sent to their relief immediately on the arrival of the messenger. On their march they met the women and children almost in a perishing condition, having traveled two days and a half without food, most of them without shoes, with no more clothing for day or night than they had on when they fled at the crack of the Indians' rifles, from their camp fires at the place of attack. After supplying their present demands as well as possible, the company proceeded, and on arriving at the place where the attack was made, they found that the stock had all been driven off and the wagons plundered of every article of value they contained. The men had fortunately escaped without any one being killed or dangerously wounded.

Report says that Lieut. Sanders' command discovered a party of Indians in ambush, and exchanged a few rounds with them, but to what effect was not known, further than no injury was done to the troops. The company of emigrants are now with the troops on Bear river, who are on their return to Camp Floyd.

I learned that two of the men were of the name of Brock, and that another's name was Thomas, from Illinois. It is also stated that a medium-sized white man, painted red, with a pair of fine dress boots on, was with the Indians at the attack.

This statement was made me by a gentleman who received it from one of the party, and I presume, as far as it goes, may be relied upon as being substantially correct.—Respectfully,
J. C. WRIGHT.
