Annie Houston on the ground of cruel-ty. The parties were married in Evans. ton, Wyo., on June 30, 1900. 'It is al-leged that defendant has become of dis-solute and immoral character and is in the habit of visiting winercoms and drinking intoxicants, thereby causing plaintiff great angulsh of mind.

A small blaze occurred at the residence of Louis Damascus, 557 west Second South street, yesterday morn-ing, caused by the falling out of the end of a flue. A big fire had been started in the stove, but the prompt discovery of the blaze prevented any serious damage. The loss will not be over $19. The apparatus from No. 2 responded to the alarm and quickly extinguished the Hre.

President Angell of the University of President Angell of the University of Michigan arrived yesterday afternoon, from the cast over the Union Pacific road, and was welcomed at the depot by Messrs* C. S. Kinney, E. S. Ferry, James H. Moyle, and Judge T. D. Lew-is, members of the Michigan alumni resident, in this city, and escorted to the University club, where he is being entertained during his solourn here. entertained during his sojourn here Dr. Angell is en route to Berkley, Cal., where he will lecture before the state university.

A small German about 22 years of age rushed up to Officer Milner a few nights ago and declared that while he was walking west on Second South street, a big colored woman came up-on him and demanded 10 cents. The German said he refused to give her the money and that she crowded him against the fence and took $2 from his pockets. He said when he started after her, she threw a rock at his head. He then became frightened and ran the other way. The police do not take any stock in the man's story.

The West Mountain Canal & Irrigation company will hold a meeting at the West Jordan meetinghouse, March 23 next at noon, to act on a petition to be used by the reclamation committee, and for any other business relative thereto that may come up. This company has for its object negotiations with the government to secure water with which to irrigate the dry lands west of the Jor-dan river. The dry farmers are united in favoring action with the government in getting water onto the dry lands, and are anxious to help push the project in every way possible. Farmers desirous of co-operating the requested to write to F. R. Lloyd, secretary, at Riverton. Thomas F. McLaughlin, aged 26, giving his residence as Salt Lake City, enlisted in the navy yesterday at the Dooly block recruiting office, as a coal passer. It is claimed that of the numeous desertions from the navy which have been credited to this state in the last year only and the state in the last year, only a small fraction of them actually belonged in Utah. Most of the deserters were eastern young men who had come west with hazy notions as in what they might or might not do, a' having reached the jumping off place in their fortunes, jumped off into the navy, from this point. They should not be credited to Salt Lake.

A benefit concert for St. Ann's Catholic orphanage will be given in the Salt Lake Theater this evening, and as an excellent program has been prepared, an entertaining evening may be expected. One hundred and twentyfive children will take part, assisted by Miss Lottle Owen and Mrs. Martha Royle King, sopranos; Mrs. Edward McGurrin, harpist: Arthur Pedersen, violinist; J. D. Sullivan, tenor; Charles Kent, baritone; Bernadine and Thomas Feeney, song and dance performers; the All Hallows college band and or-chestra, and Master Edward Fitzpat-rick, violinist. Miss Nora Gleason, or-ganist of St. Mary's cathedral, will have the direction of the concert

The Biggest Character in it by All Odds is the Famous Brutus.

HONESTY. SCRUPULOUS HIS

How it Was Easily Played Upon by Cassins, the Man Practical-Hamlet Tonight.

"Julius Caesar" was the theme last evening of Prof. Clark's lecture. It was partly dramatic, partly interpretative. There was a large audience, and though the hour was late when the reading closed there was no sign of members of said weariness on the part of the listeners. The play, "Julius Caesar," Prof. Clark explained, was not a historical drama at all, though at one time its subject was connected with history. Caesar, for instance, is not here the great Julius, though he furnishes the mainspring of action in the play. If, therefore, we wish to obtain information or impressions of the famous conqueror we go, not to Shakespeare, but to Plutarch, the real source to some extent, of this great drama. The biggest character by all odds is Brutus. Here we see the most important element of tragedy-a strong character, but imperfect, in conflict with the over-powering forces of the world. Brutus is the strong character, and his imper-fection is his absolute honesty and his utter inability to grasp the situation as it is or to enter into any compromises. He altogether lacks the pracmises. He altogether lacks the prac-tical; he is a complete idealist. To feel this we have only to notice care-fully just what Brutus does and says throughout the play. His scrupulous henesty is easily played upon by Cas-sius, the man practical. He believes that the liberties of Rome may be put into the hands of the mob. He refuses to make a confidant of Mark Anthony, who turns out the upsetter of all the who turns out the upsetter of all the plans of the conspirators. He permits Anthony to speak at the funeral of Caesar. He imagines that the mob can be trusted to act upon what he tells them at the funeral, instead of seeing, as anyone with a grain of the practical would see, that they would be swayed against him by the subtle art of Mark Anthony. And even in the last scene, the night before the battle that is to decide his fate and the fate of his loved country, instead of making every prep-aration for the impending contest, he picks up a book to find the "place where he did leave off." All this shows conclusively that Brutus was an idealist in

Yet Brutus was flawless otherwise, His private life was without a blemish. He loved his country and her interests. He laid his conspirator hand upon the imperial head of the nation's ruler, from the best conceivable motive. He siew Caesar for what he might do, not for what he had done; for being "the serpent's egg." whereas in point of fact, lesar was the veritable "serpent" it-He had the same dagger for him. self. self when the good of Rome desired his death.

There had been, Mr. Clark thought, too much tendency to overlook the im-portance of the mob in "Julius Caesar." The mob is one of the most important clements in the play. In addition to showing how easily a mob can be swayed from one extreme to another and how little the common people are to be trusted with the interests of liberty Shakespear has made this a point round which the action of the play centers. We have the keynote of the drama in the opening words—the people and the patricians are at odds; and they continue so throughout. Then, too, the mob from the extreme of risking their lives "on the chimney tops with their infants in their arms" to show homage to homage 'to Pompey, now take a holiday in honor of Fompey's conqueror. They at first hear Mark Anthony refuse - to hearing Brutus but later, crazed with rage at what the former has said, hunt what it the mob was not en, irresponsible—the play could not be "Julius Caesar." As for the famous streets for the honorable Brutus. the

As for the famous orations over the body of the murdered ruler, Prof. Clark chose to read them analytically rather than leave them with the mere reading. The Brutus oration he pro-nounced the most inane bit of speech ever delivered in public. It is historical to the last degree: it was written and afterwards memorized; in short, it is everything that a great speech on such an occasion should not be. Pretending to give reasons for murdering Caesar, Brutus only takes an elaborate and ar-tificial means of teling them that he slew their ruler for the good of Rome. Anthony's address, on the other hand, is everything that the other is not. It is a perfect model of popular oratory, and exemplifies all the principles of public oral discourse. From the first utterance, which brings in the design-ing Anthony upon the skirts of Brutus, to the last syllable when the mob is clamorous for the blood of those who were even remotely implicated in the death of Caesar, the peech is the subtlest art. Mr. Clark read parts of each oration, with voice and gesture that indicated these respective attitudes to-wards them. He wished however not to be understood as finding fault with the great dramatist; for these effects precisely what Shakespeare were sought. He commented similarly on the fa mous quarrel scene between Cassius and Brutus, explaining the choler of the latter by the words which he afterwards uttered with such an agony of "Portia is dead!" despair:

The recital was highly successful, though the audience would have liked to hear Mr. Clark do more reading. This afternoon he reads the same play before the school children of the seventh and eighth grades: this evening he gives an interpretative recital on "Hamlet."

Yesterday afternoon Prof. Clark gave Armgart," George Elliot's superb poem. The main theme was Armgart's devotion to art. The story of how she placed it above every other consideration in tife because nature had given her a beautiful voice, and how she subsequently lost it, was most effectively and interestingly told.
