A RUSSIAN PRINCESS JOINS THE ONEIDA COMMUNITY.

[CONCLUDED.]

This success induced her to write a few novels, which met with the same reception. In 1861 she married the young Prince Troubeschenoff in the presence of nearly all the members of the Imperial Court, the wedding ceremonies being performed at St. Isaac's Cathedral in St. Petersburg. The next two years she passed with her husband in Paris, where her beauty and accomplishments were generally admired, and where she wrote for the Gymnase Theater a short play which was greatly applauded.

Unfortunately, the Prince Troubeschenoff was an inveterate gambler, and having one night lost nearly all his fortune at the Cercle Imperial, where he played baccarat at very high stakes, he committed suicide at an early hour on the following morning in a thicket of the Bois de Boulogne.

The untimely end of her husband filled the young countess, who had been devotedly attached to him, with the most profound melancholy, and ever since she was noted for her eccentric freaks. She returned to Russia and buried herself for several years in her small chateau on the shores of Lake Onega, admitting few or no visitors. Her relatives tried to prevail on her to return to St. Petersburg, hoping that the gay life of the Russian capital would divert her troubled mind. She steadfastly turned a deaf ear to their solicitations, until she was visited one day at her lonesome retreat by Home, the celebrated Spiritualist.

What occurred between her and Home never became accurately known. Suffice it to say that she went back with him to St. Petersburg, where she henceforth led a gay life, strangely contrasting with the lonely years she had passed on Lake Onega.

THE DEATH-BED OF FANNY FERN

Mrs. Parton has been afflicted for many years with inflammatory rheumatism. She has been able to ride about, however, and walk in her garden—she was an ardent admirer of flowers—until this fall. She passed last summer at her villa in Newport. Her right arm was so affected as to be powerless, and she has not left her room since her return to the city. She was forced to sit in an easy chair, her arm being supported by a frame. To lie down caused intense pain and a difficulty in breathing. In this chair, where she has sat for two months, she died, surrounded by loving friends, and her eyes resting on the beautiful flowers which were her comfort in life.

She was perfectly conscious to the last moment, and sent messages of her love to distant friends. A short time ago she told her husband that she was shocked when she saw strangers viewing the remains of the late Alice Carey in Dr. Deem's church, and one of her last requests was, "Let no stranger look upon my face," whispered as the breath of life was passing from her. She had always entertained a strong aversion to ostentatious funerals, and her wishes in this respect will be fulfilled to the letter by her friends.

Early on Thursday she knew her end was approaching. At three o'clock in the afternoon she called her family around the arm chair in which she expired—for her sufferings prevented her from resting on a bed. Sadly did every member respond to the summons. In the little circle were Dr. Parton, Miss Eldridge, the dying lady's daughter, her two sisters, Miss Julia Willis and Mrs. Bumstead, and a little grandchild. Dr. Sturges, her physician, came in at that moment and found the group. The authoress, whose life was rapidly ebbing, called each to her side and said a few words of admonition till she had reached the last. When her little grandchild came to her, she directed Dr. Parton to send her early to bed, and if her death occurred that night not to tell the child till to-morrow.

Soon after this sad scene Dr. Sturges stepped forward and felt her pulse. The authoress fixed her gaze upon him, and asked firmly:

"Doctor, am I dying?"

The doctor answered, "Yes."

Her pulse had almost gone, and she presented unmistakable traces of her approaching demise; but the announcement of the physician made no impression upon her. At half-past six o'clock those around her noticed that she was unusually still. They felt her pulse; it had stopped. She had just closed her eyes as if to sleep. A mirror was placed to her lips, but its continued brightness revealed the fact that she had breathed her last.—New York Sun.

MONTANA NOTES.

A delegation of Indians, consisting of fourteen chiefs from the Grand River agency, Dakota, and eighteen chiefs and one squaw, from near Fort Peck, Montana, are on their way to Washington.

At Horse Prairie, where are excellent placer mines, there are about thirty-five white men and some fifty Chinamen, with a prospect of the latter acquiring the whole camp. We learn that the Yearian Bros. have sold their ground—of which they had a large and valuable extent—to a Chinese company for $70,000. This is the largest amount we recollect of hearing paid for any lot of placer ground in Montana. To avoid the penalties of the Allen Bill, we are told two of the Chinamen have taken out first papers as American Citizens (?) A number of other purchases at the same place are contemplated by the Chinese, and from present appearances the entire camp will likely go into their hands before spring.—New North West.

We are indebted to Mr. J. W. Sweeney for as nice, delicious a specimen of green gage plums as ever grew out doors, cultivated in the garden of McWhirk Bros., at Missoula. This is the first bearing season of the trees and over a half peck of the fine fruit was gathered. Mr. McWhirk has also splendid apples fully matured and has no doubt that fruit growing can be made an eminent success in that region. Like flowers, which a year or two ago it was deemed impossible to grow out of doors here, and which now greet one with their beauty at the door of almost every house in Montana, fruit will not grow unless it is planted. This may strike as a self-evident fact, unnecessary to be set forth in a newspaper. But if our readers will recall the past and compare it with the present they will concede that for years Montanians took it for granted flowers wouldn't grow and never entrusted a seed to the hospitable earth. It's the same with fruit. Plant and Montana will in many portions grow prolific orchards. Mr. Sweeney, who was through the Bitter Root Valley, reports the most abundant harvest, which four threshing machines are now busily engaged upon. The yield is enormous. The farmers are now anxious for a market, and we regret to know that the demand for their products being dull at present, has disheartened many. Bread stuffs and produce are low. Wheat ranges from 65 to 70 cts. per bushel; we have heard it said it can be bought as low as 60 cts. The best flour sells at Stevensville for $3.50 per 400 lbs. Potatoes 1 ct. per lb.; onions 2½ cts.; tomatoes 5 cts. "Eggs are eggs" still—50 cts. per dozen, and scarce. There is some comfort in this: Living will be within the reach of the humblest this winter; the gracious potato will fill the land with fatness, and the gorgeous onion spread its sweet fragrance wherever man hath appetite.—New Northwest.
