Johns, Philo, if need be, to maintain this object and when you have the supply, do not waste it. There will be no cause for regret in following this plan. In wisdom can be demonstrated with mathematical precision from just present and probable conditions, and will be shown in the experience of those who try it.

To make this object of the time, the immediate future is present with specific events. In the future, the harvest will be a greater or less extent. These are indicated always by preliminary signs, but usually the warnings are not recognized until too late. Who will discern them now, while yet there is time? Who will act earlier than the storm while the clouds are lowering and the thunder pealing, or the tempest bursts in its fury? The destruction of crops here and there in the country by wind, sun, and hail, the failure by drought and other causes—these are warning signs that the conditions of the harvest which has continued for years may quickly give way to a condition not so satisfactory as that now existing. Hoping for the best, the wise will not wait until the storm may be too late, and the preparation in this instance still will be good judgment even if the best that can be hoped for comes.

STEPS LEADING TO STATEHOOD.

The News has been asked again to answer the question: Whether Utah is now a state, and if not, when it will be, also what steps are yet to be taken to secure the admission into the Union. With this question in view, the News has been asked to answer the question: Whether Utah is now a state, and if not, when it will be, also what steps are yet to be taken to secure the admission into the Union.

First of all, a preliminary is to be issued by the Governor, ordering an election of one hundred and seven delegates to a constitutional convention—the members of this convention to be appointed among the several counties of the Territory.

This preliminary is to be issued August 1 (last Wednesday).

The election therein called is to be held on the 11th of November next.

The convention referred to is to meet in Salt Lake City on the first Monday in next March; and its business is to prepare the people of Utah to accept the Constitution of the United States, after which it is to proceed to form a constitution and state government for the proposed state of Utah.

By action of this convention, and under the terms of the enabling act of Congress, the constitution which these delegates (when elected) are to submit to the people of the proposed state for their ratification or rejection, this election is to be held the following November—that is, November of next year.

The next and final step is the certifying of the returns of this election. To the President, whom duty is about to be—if the constitution is passed, and the proposed state government is approved in form, and if all the provisions of the enabling act have been complied with to issue its proclamation, announcing the result of the said election, whereupon the proposed state shall be deemed admitted into the Union.

It will thus be seen that Utah will not be a fully-fledged state until after the election of November next, and November—probably in December, 1905, and a number of feet, the admit rat on the national flag will be placed in its proper position until the 1st of July 1906.

The present Territorial officers will continue to hold office, or in case their terms expire, successors will be elected as usual, until November next year.

At that time, when voting upon the state constitution, the people will have to vote for their representative in Congress, their governor, and other state officers, including the legislature which at this coming session will elect the senators to represent the state in the upper house of the national Congress.

PROVIDE YOUR BREAD.

Last season's suggestion, made by the News in regard to putting in a good supply of breadstuffs was adopted by a large number of people who have had occasion since in fact highly gratified at the course pursued. Flour and grain came down in low figures and remained there for some time. The suggestion referred to, people who had had the business depression began to realize the necessity to which it directed attention—that of providing a quantity of the food of life, and they put aside other demands to attend to the important consideration of having a supply of food for their families. When they had done this, other matters received notice. The result was that all flour was a heavier product by families of flour for food use long ago had been known here in a similar manner, and the flour market was out of sympathy with the winter and spring, there was nothing to worry about that at least their bread was sure, through the exercise of timely foresight.

The lesson of last fall should be learned by a still larger number, as the flour market is getting to be a very tight one, and the flour market is getting to be a very tight one, and the flour market is getting to be a very tight one.

It is possible that the flour market is getting to be a very tight one, and the flour market is getting to be a very tight one, and the flour market is getting to be a very tight one.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

One of the most remarkable signs of the present time is the approach of science to the boundaries of the religious, indicating that perfect harmony between the two is possible.

a paradise, and describe these conditions in the most glowing terms of which human language and poetic imagination are capable. That all can be summed up in the general statement that a time will come when the human race shall be in a position to give up the attainment of all that is good and beautiful, and be contented with the simple and the perfect, given to accomplish these ends. To this end religion has been struggling through the ages and does so still. Science has rapidly the light has sometimes been lost and dark and the waves of sin and selfishness have dashed against the earthly shores, as if total destruction were inevitable until the storm and the human, the silver tones have been ringing from the highlands of revelation, pointing forth the message of hope in the struggling children of the Adamic race, that there is a harbor, where rest, and peace and joy await their souls.

Those who have followed the developments of science will have perceived that science is pointing in the same direction. Science is slowly solving the secrets of nature and mechanism is being perfected until space and time no longer are to mean what they formerly were, but what will the result be? We are clearly approaching a time when the means of promoting the perfection of life will be so abundant and the facilities of enjoyment so plentiful that they will be within the reach of all. Then mankind will have time and opportunity to follow the wonderful evolution toward becoming the earth and nurturing righteousness. God will no longer be the ruling power, simply for the reason that it is not needed as it is now and when the perfection of man and all his evils will have been removed for existence. Then, indeed, the earth will be that paradise, of which revelation has so often spoken.

And this is no idle dream, modern man stands on the threshold of discovery, which when realized, will render these things actual facts. When the fine work of Edison and Tesla and Kewley, and many others is done, the world will enter upon a new epoch of its history.

Among the men named Mr. Kewley particularly stands out as a prominent figure, although less known than others. For twenty years he has been laboring on the problem of floating and maintaining the human body by which nature produces her various phenomena. To realize his idea is at present impossible, but he seems to have penetrated to the source, and such experimenting with what he calls "his very own" of matter. And according to scientific laws he has succeeded in making a man a mystery to himself, and he has succeeded in making a man a mystery to himself, and he has succeeded in making a man a mystery to himself.

It is possible to picture to one's mind what man can do when he will in his hand the key to the mighty forces that turn the earth in its evolutionary wheel. Toward the discovery of that key science now is heading its energy.

To some the present aspects of the world may be discouraging, when anxiety in the state and anxiety in the situation seem to threaten the social structure with ruin. But in times like this, it is well to remember that the very foundations in the realm of science are a sign of its speedy fall. It was so before the birth of theavior; the darkness was intense just before the dawning of the new light. It is so now before the coming of the day of the resurrection, that the intensity of the light is no sign of strength. It will give way to that light of which both religion and science are anxious to apprehend in glory.
