Horrible Death of a Boy.—Idaho Lawyers' Antics.—A Scheme to Raise Water.

Local fishermen are arranging to build fall races in Boise City, Idaho, before the latter part of this month or the first of next.

Says the Bailey Times: During the past two weeks no less than six ill people at ranches from the genus of animal poisonin have been reported as occurring in this city and Bellevue.

A gentleman in this city, says the Idaho Democrat, has invented a machine to raise water from the rivers and streams for mining and irrigation purposes. It has created much favorable comment.

The members of the bar of Idaho county are taking steps toward the formation of a bar association. J. F. Ainslie was elected president, E. F. Fulton secretary. Some of the principal objects of the association will be to encourage the settling of legal business in non-litigious channels.

John Albright, a cars dealer, was recently shot and killed in a room over a saloon at Livingston, Montana, by Bernie King, a prizefighter. The latter, who bears an excellent name, has another string at Nampa, to which circumstance the following sentiment is said to be due: "I am in jail and expect to be hung. Pray for my soul."

Several parties from here have been out in the hills this week hunting deer, and tell some very big tales about seeing deer and bears, says the Umatilla Chronicle. But as yet as we can find out, deer are quite plentiful on the range this year and come very near to town. A party from Upper Umatilla arrived this week. Chickens are also plentiful.

Oliver Eaton, an eight-year-old boy, has met a horrible death while playing with his brother at Portland, Oregon. The boys were playing near an uncompleted sewer when they discovered that the soil caved readily. They commenced digging each from right. His brother gave the alarm and a number of men were soon at the scene, but before they could dig away the soil and the boy was dead. The father of the boy is a printer, now in San Francisco.

Walter Collins and Robert Gray were the first editors of the first newspaper published in California; they founded the Californian at Monterey in August, 1846. Collins had brought the press and type from the American missionaries in Honolulu. It was an old Ramage press of wooden frame, wooden bed and plate of hard wood, worked by a screw, and capable of making 100 impressions an hour. It had been sent from Boston to Honolulu. The type had been sung to woe and woe of faulty font, without the letter "w" in italic. Two "v's" were substituted to represent "w" to express "vast and small interstellar."—Los Gatos Mail.

The pig industry seems to be gaining ground in this county says the Richfield Advocate. The farming district south between Richfield and Walhville is now fairly alive with pig fever, gathering up the refuse wheat, oats, barley, beans and every possible available thing. The pig is taking the same position as the steers that the sheep are on the mountains; they are eating every available vegetable substance and converting them into fat, clothing and money. John and Will Gardner have a herd of over 200, John and James Hunter have over 100, James Butler has over 50, O. Brigger, Andersons, J. W. Cowley, and many others have small herds of a dozen or twenty.

The San Francisco Chronicle says that John G. Morrison has sued the estate of Hiram A. Pearson to enforce a rejected claim for $10,000. This amount he claimed to be due as Pearson's share of losses sustained in the conduct of certain mines in Idaho which he owned jointly with Morrison. During their partnership the mines were operated at a profit to the amount of which Morrison said $58,807.20 and Pearson but $14,702.00. Judgment is demanded for the balance of $10,105.10, with $10,000 which Pearson still owed as part of the purchase price of his one-half interest. Morrison says that he presented his claim against the estate but it was rejected by the executor.

Ben Williams and Walter Douglas, of Heber, while down in Silver a few days ago, went swimming in the Provo river, says the Arizona Progress. The former swam out to a rock in the stream and the latter followed. Mr. Williams dived off the rock but when he appeared he was paralyzed. He went down a second time and Mr. Douglas seeing his companion's danger dived after him, but as he arose the second time, he was washed away from the spot which proved to be a whirlpool which had tumbled the other all to a deep when he went below and he became exhausted in fighting for his life to the surface. He was unconscious when the shore was reached and for two hours he was rolled and rubbed by Mr. Douglas before being able to navigate.

John Maguire, a wealthy citizen of Vallejo, Cal., received notice that his wife in Cheyenne was very ill and desired her. On hearing he made a visit to the cemetery and found that the vault had been opened. The steps leading into the vault and on the floor of the coffin screws and ornaments and broken glass. At the right of the entrance was a casket containing the remains of Mrs. Eliza Maguire. Evidences of the desecration at the casket were plain. The screws taken from the lid had not been reset. On the casket was a name-plate bearing the name of the late Eliza M. Maguire. The engraved plate had been pried from its fastenings and the heavy plate glass at the top smashed in as if it had been struck with a heavy hammer. Neither of the bodies had been tampered with. Mr. Maguire made up his mind that the vandalism was the work of tramps who had hoped to find valuables on the dead.

A clever bitter, unintentionally produced by sunflower extract, has been received through the mail by D. Litch, a well known capitalist of San Jose, Cal. The letter tells Mr. Litch that the guardianship of a young woman and the custody of $10,000,000, the writer lates in valley [illegible] Africa. In consideration [illegible] the latter part of the letter "w" is italic. Two "v's" were substituted to represent "w" to express "vast and small interstellar."—Los Gatos Mail.
