

CHEAP LIVING IN JAPAN.

How the Fall of Silver Afflicts the Country and the People.

JAPAN is doing all she can to keep silver in the country. She has to pay for the goods she imports from America in gold, and the silver question is a far more important one here than it is in any other country.

The country is now on a silver basis, and there is sure to be a general rise in the price of everything. At the present time the exchange is going up every day and a gold dollar is worth about two and a half yen. This makes traveling comparatively cheap, and though I have been paying four dollars a day at the Grand Hotel in Yokohama it really costs me only two. Clothing here is wonderfully cheap, and all English goods can be bought for the same prices they bring in London. The reason with Japan is that they have been charging more than ten percent duty, and labor is worth so much less than in America. They pay nothing for coal, and their coal is the best in the world. Their ordinary every day life is very cheap. The breakfast, served when they rise, is a bowl of porridge, with a few bits of meat or fish, and a bowl of tea. At noon they have a bowl of "chicken," which is served in a bowl, and contains soup, fish, a bit of meat, and a bowl of rice. In the evening they have a bowl of "chicken," which is served in a bowl, and contains soup, fish, a bit of meat, and a bowl of rice.

As to the living of the Japanese, they are not so poor as they are made out to be. They are not so poor as they are made out to be. They are not so poor as they are made out to be. They are not so poor as they are made out to be. They are not so poor as they are made out to be. They are not so poor as they are made out to be.

that the ordinary American would not like, and they do the work of both Europe and Asia. They are not so poor as they are made out to be. They are not so poor as they are made out to be. They are not so poor as they are made out to be. They are not so poor as they are made out to be. They are not so poor as they are made out to be.

There are not many things of value in Japan. The only things of value are the things that are made in Japan. The only things of value are the things that are made in Japan. The only things of value are the things that are made in Japan. The only things of value are the things that are made in Japan. The only things of value are the things that are made in Japan.

with this in the mind of the American, who is expected to see at his own expense the highest medical and scientific skill. They are purely vegetarians, and in ingredients and methods have never been equaled. They are not so poor as they are made out to be. They are not so poor as they are made out to be. They are not so poor as they are made out to be.

Do not be deceived by misrepresentation. All silver is sold through the Japanese government, and the price is fixed. Do not be deceived by misrepresentation. All silver is sold through the Japanese government, and the price is fixed. Do not be deceived by misrepresentation. All silver is sold through the Japanese government, and the price is fixed.
