

Special Correspondence

C T. PETERSBURG, Jan. 21.-Quite recently a report was circulated in St. Petersburg that Gen. Stoessel, who achieved world-wide fame by his defense of Port Arthur against the Japanese, had been obliged by necessity FULL BLOWN HOSTESS. It is stated on all sides that the duchess means to blossom forth as a full-blown hostess this season. Now is her chance to step into the shoes vacated by that other American duchess, her grace of Mariborough. The chief mission of the American heiress who weds a peer is supposed to be to spend money freely. If she does not do that, she is voted stingy and more or less of a social failure. But the English girl who chances to bring her aristocratic husband a hand-some fortune, is not judged by the same standerd. If she does not care to spend money in entertaining people for whom she has no real liking, she loss no prestige. She is simply cred-lied with being socially exclusive. ELSIE IS COMING; to seek financial aid from a well-known benevolent organization which is indirectly connected with the Russian army. Confirmation or denial of this report was refused at the office of the institution in question. Its truth is considered highly probable, however, by those who know into what desperate straits Stoessel has fallen of late, and how pathetic a figure generally Is this man whose deeds once seemed likely to be rememberd with gratitude by his ountrymen as long as the record of them survived. It appears only yesterday that Stoes-At appears only yesterday that stoes-sel's name was a household word in all countries and in every quarter of the globe. His bravery, his indomit-able perseverance and endurance, his indifference to hardships and danger, were described and extolled by enthu-siastic scribes allke in America, Eu-rope and Asia. After Port Arthur had fallen the German emberor conferred fope and Asia. After Port Artnur had fallen the German emperor conferred upon him the order of the Black Eagle, the highest decoration in his power to give, in token of what was considered his marvelous feat in holding Port Ar-thur so long against the aggressive yellow enemy. Stoessel, in brief, reached the uttermost zenith of earthly fame only to learn that all such glorfame, only to learn that all such glor-

RUMORS AND CHARGES.

les are fleeting.

As readers will remember, assertions

were made soon after the fall of Port Arthur that its defense had not been conducted in an efficient manner and that Gen. Stoessel had committed a conducted in an efficient manner and that Gen. Stoessel had committed a number of grave indiscretions and mis-takes in the course of his contest with the Japanese. These accusations were supplemented by far more terrible ac-cusations of cowardice and treachery. Stoessel was accused of handing over the fortress to the Japanese in spite of the fact that he still possessed suff-cient troops stores and amunition to hold out for a further period of many months. Both Gen. Stoessel and those of his friends who were in the Far East when these accusations were first made telegraphed indignant denials of all the charges, but the statements once spread could not easily be suppressed. Conse-quently the soldier, instead of carry-ing his desire of remaining in the Far East, resolved to return to Russia in order to face his accuses and to repu-diate the charges fevoled against him. From that moment until now the de-fender of Port Arthux has experienced nothing but a succession of insults and humiliations. He returned from the Far East on board a steamish of one of the German lines and his unpleasant exper-lences began during the voyage back to Europe. His fellow passengers includ-German lines and his unpleasant exper-iences began during the voyage back to Europe. His fellow passengers includ-ed a number of Russian officers who had been invalided home from the war or who were returning to Europe after having been released from captivity in Japan on their word of honor not to take any more part in the hostilities. At Shanghai a number of German offi-cers from Klaochao came on board and were first cabin passengers as far as Hamburg. The Russian officers prac-tically boycotted the unfortunate Stoessel, and the German officers, fol-lowing their example, shunned him os-dangers of Port Arthur had been dur-ing the war.

CZAR WOULDN'T SEE HIM.

It is customary for Russians of rank It is customary for Russians of rank who return home from foreign ser-vice to be received by the caar, who then listens from their own lips to a report of their official activity. Gen. Stoessel was not summoned to the im-perial presence, and when, after an interval of waiting, he applied for an audience with the caar, he was curtly informed by the communication of a subordinate court official that his pe-uition could not be granted. It is also customary for a Russian general to report himself to the minister of war on returning from foreign service, but report himself to the minister of war on returning from foreign service, but when Gen. Stoessel presented himself at the ministry to discharge this duty, he was not admitted and soon after-ward received a written communica-tion that the minister did not desire to see him. When he went to call on old comrades with whom he had been on terms of intimate friendship hefore and during the war, they frebefore and during the war, they fre-quently were "not at home." When he went to the theater, the persons sitting round him made critical and insulting remarks about his generalship in voices intended to reach his

PURSUED BY MOB.

When the general ventured out into the streets for a walk, he was often recognized and pursued by a mob of fanatical, patriotic Russians, who overwhelmed him with curses and showered insuits on him with aston-ishing vehemence. On one or two well founded. Gen. Stocssel's sec-onds called upon Dournovo to fight a duel to the death, the technical con-dition being pistols at 15 paces until one combatant was killed. Dournovo declined to accept the challenge on the ground that a chivalrous code of honor did not compel him to fight a duel with an officer whose reputa-tion had been stained by the official declined of a court-martial.

REFUSED PERMISSION.

REFUSED PERMISSION. Gen. Stoessel afterward renewed his applications for parmission to leave St. Petersburg, but the authori-ties obstinately refused to allow him to settle in any other part of Euro-pean Russia. Finally, however, he received definite orders to withdraw to Lulinov, a small town in a southern Caucasian province on the shores of the Black sea. This town was a cen-ter of political and racial upheavals, and Gen. Stoessel, in proceeding there, seemed likely either to be massacred by barbarians, Tartars or fanatical Mahommedans, or to fall a victim to the deadly climate of the place in which strangers could hardly hope to live. He is still in exile in this place, liv-

He is still in exlle in this place, liv-ing on a miscrable pittance from the Russian government hardly enabling him to keep body and soul together. His brave wife, the companion of his strenuous campaign in the Far East, holds out unfilteningly against all the dangers of their Caucasian home. Gen. Stoessel, although still in the prime of life, is a broken-down man. His hair has turned gray, his face is fur-rowed with lines of care and his shoulders are bent with the stoop of instance, only 31 persons committed sufcide because of poverty, while two more shuffled off this mortal coil because life had dealt too generously with them and they had become satiated with it. Sickness was the motive alleged in 100 cases, while love affairs gone wrong drove 63 to destruction, and domestic strife impelled 23 to fies to the other world where there is neither marriage nor giving in marriage. OLDEST VICTIM. The oldest victim was a man of $7;

in summer than in winter. In the month of May, when all nature was proclaiming the joy of living, 48 people decided that death was preferable and terminated their existence. In drear November, when the birds had ceased singing and bleak winds wailed mournfully through the leafless trees, only 28 persons yielded to the conviction that life

The motives assigned for suicide also disclose sore perplexing problems. For

was not worth living.

the youngest a little girl of 8. What dire tragedy of childhood caused her to dire tragedy of childhood caused her to take the leap in the dark does not ap-pear; but the bare mention of the fact awakes a feeling of infinite pity. Poor little mite! May her soul rest in peace. The men graatly outnumbered the women, which can hardly be regarded as proof of the superiority of the male sex. There were $12 of them who took their own lives in the last 12 months their own lives in the last 12 months and of women, 112-little more than a third as many. In the methods chosen for making their exits, men showed a much greater partiality for bullets than did women. Only 13 of the latter shot themselves, while 118 men chose that way of ridding themselves of the bur-den of life. Despairing womanhood dis-played the greater preference for poi-son. Thirty-two women swallowed fa-tal drafts and 19 men. Twenty-eight women selected the most ghastly form of suicide-throwing themselves from top-story windows-and only 10 men.

I hear that the Duchess of Rox-burghe's young sister-in-law, Mrs. Robert Goelet, who was Elste Whelen of Philadelphia, and is of Irish extrac-tion, is shortly coming with her hus-band to stay with the Roxburghes. Here she has the reputation of being one of the most picturesque American women who have ever visited these shores, and she is considered lovely besides. Most of her dresses she plans herself with the aid of the old mas-lers. As she is a clever artist and besides. Most of her dresses she plans herself with the aid of the old mas-ters. As she is a clever artist and hours galleries inside and out, not to speak at all of our own national gal-lery, she has no difficulty in suggest-ing studies for her gowns. Many of the servants at Blenheim hiving there now with his two boys who are to remain there during the absence of their mother who is abroad with her relations. The family live in an wing of the immense house which is of couse, done for the purpose of cutting down expenses. as the duke, who is a proud man, does not wish to take more maney from his wife or her father than is absolutely necessary. His mother, the Marchioness of Bland-ford, is keeping house for him. Be-fore the duchess went abroad, there was a family meeting at after the builting and arrangements mone-tating the duches gave builting and arrangements mone-tating the duches of him. Be-for signs of relenting, but many of house, which was guite amicable, if a unfe frigid, and arrangements mone-taurs were made. The duchess gave builting of the necess of her former houses of air and the rost abroad, the will return to the scenes of her former itemphs at her husband's historic pal-ter.

FULL BLOWN HOSTESS.

ELSIE IS COMING.

LOVE MATCH FOR SURE.

Tyrrell Cavendish's family are highly pleased with his engagement to Miss Julia Siegel of New York. He is very popular here, and belongs to a good st. being the grandson of Lord Wa-tenari and nephew of Sir William Smith-Marriott. It is said that the magement was the result of mutual invest first sight and that Miss Sie-parary and nephew of Sir William state and the state of the sight of the taggement was the result of mutual invest first sight and that Miss Sie-parary and readily fail in love with the Perhaps it is true. A man may a casily and readily fail in love with a rengin as a poor one. Anyhow their woong was a short one. They met last teason for the first time at a ball, and before a week was over he had pro-posed to her. Miss Siegel has been mach admired here and had plenty of "Mers." Though her fiance is not ex-stify what we term a parti, he will, when his expectations mature, be fair-y well off in his own risht. But the dary Miss Siegel will bring him will make it the easier for him to watt un-til he comes into his own. CHANGES IN GARB. Tyrrell Cavendish's family are highly

CHANGES IN GARB.

CHANGES IN GARB. When i was ordering a riding habit of the was ordering a riding habit the works day from Alfred Ellis, one of the king's tailors, he gave me this is the some decided changes in garb, is the swells are ordering their dress is of a decided blue or a bright is the swells are ordering their dress is of a decided blue or a bright is of the new colors blue dress with other night when he appeared the other night when he appeared is all when or a tight is blue or or whe which auriously enough. When the waistcasts are to be worn is with vest with brown, and a very to blue.

lady Cheylesmore, who was Miss Easheth French of New York, was any busy during Christmas and the Yes Year, working up orders for her fell industry which she founded in . . . (Continued on page fourteen.)

Great Britain and the United States alike are incensed at the high-handed action of James Alexander Swettenham, governor of Jamaica, in practically ordering the squadron of Admiral Davis out of the harbor of Kingston while the American officer and his men were at that desolated and stricken port on an errand of mercy and acting under direct instructions of the president. Nations are very sensitive on all points involving their dignity and, according to diplomatic precedent, scarcely a greater offense could be offered one nation by another than that which was accorded the United States, through Admiral Davis, by the official representative of Great Britain in Jamaica. That the British home government was not in sympathy with his action has been demonstrated by the promptness of the foreign office in ordering an immediate explanation from the offending governor. Lacking such action, irreparable injury to the friendship existing between the two nations might have easily resulted Gov. Swettenham is 61 years of age and has been for many years identified with the British foreign service. He has been always known to possess strong "anti-Yankee" sentiments and an exaggerated idea of his own importance, but it was scarcely anticipated that this feature of his character would lead him into such indiscretion as that of which he has been guilty toward a friendly nation acting in the cause of a common humanity in a time of great peril and distress. It may be that this incident will close his active diplomatle career.

lowing their example, shunned him os-tentatiously at all times and at all

OPEN INSULTS.

The officers, both Russian and Ger-man, refused to sit at the same table with Stoessel and demonstratively turned their backs to him when he happened to be in their vicinity. When he made his morning's promenade on dack the others made he attemnt to deck the others made no attempt to deck the others made no attempt to conceal their desire to avoid that part of the ship on which he was taking his exercise. This condition of affairs was indescribably humiliating for a man who had commanded a great for-tress in a great war and who, immedi-ately after the capture of Port Arthur, had received the highest decoration had received the highest decoration which the German emperor has power to confer. Mme. Stoessel, who accom-panied her husband home from the war, was overwhelmed with shame and chagrin at this treatment and suffered a nervous prostration which threatened to have serious consequences. For a time she and her husband left their cabin as little as possible in order to avoid being shunned and boycotted by their fellow passengers. After the long weary voyage had ter-minated Gen. Stoessel met with the sams hostlle reception on landing once more in his native country. A success-ful general returning from a campaigu in which he has gained honor is usual-ly received with public marks of approly received with public marks of appro-bation, but Gen. Stoessel came ashore without even those marks of respect being manifested which it is customary to show a high officer on his return from foreign service. Dressed in a slouch hat, a gray suit and a long, shabby overcoat instead of his brilliant military uniform, the hero came ashore, currenter his own has and supmorted military uniform, the hero came ashore, carrying his own bag and supported only by his trembling wife. He seemed desirous to avoid publicity, for he an-ticipated and dreaded an openly hostile reception from his fellow countrymen. But his efforts to escape notice were un-successful, and when he had been per-ceived by the crowd many bitter cries were raised, such as "There goes the very d by the crowd many bitter per-were raised, such as "There goes the traitor!" "The traitor has dared to land!" "Death to all traitors!" and other cruel insults of the same charac-ter.

During the terrible period when he commanded the garrison of Port Ar-thur and directed with skill and brav-ery the defense of that fortress, when thur and directed with skill and brav-ery the defense of that fortress, when day after day he faced death and saw starvation staring bim in the face, Gen. Stoessel used to encourage himself and to strengthen his own resolve by picturing the triumphs which would fall to his lot if he succeeded in making an homerable fight for the good name of Russia. The Japanese acknowledged that he had made such a fight, and im-partial observers of the struggle were of the same opinion, yet his own coun-trymen regarded him as a coward and a traitor and treated him accordingly. Consequently, instead of resenter-ing Russia in that ceremonial style suitable for a hero coming back from the wars. Gen. Stoessel crept into his native land like a criminal being hunted down by the police. At the first sound of the hostile cries on the quay he hastened to seclude him-self and his wife in a closed cah and are at the the found a welcome and shelter, but his suay in St. Peters-burg became a more severe test of his manhood and courage than all the burg became a more severe test of his manhood and courage than all the occasions he was still more seriously molested by patriotic street mobs, when men and women alike attempt-ed to tear the clothes from his back. ed to tear the clothes from his back. At another time a party of women and girls spat in his face, cursing him as a cowardly traitor to Russia. When Gen, Stoessel applied for permission to leave St. Petersburg in order to seek refuge from persecution in some secluded part of the empire, the au-thorities refused to allow him to de-part on the ground that he was suspart on the ground that he was sus-pected of a desire to support the revolutionary movement. Finally, after a long period of tribu-

Finally, after a long period of orbit-lation, a court-martial met to try Gen. Stoessel on the charges formulated against him in connection with the defense of Port Arthur. Gen. Floug, another high officer who took a pro-minent part in the Manchurian cam-paign, presided over the court-mar-tial and a leading lawyer named Maximore was normitted to act as tal and a teacing have rando Maximow was permitted to act as counsel for the defense. The pro-ceedings of the court-martial were conducted in an extremely unsatis-factory manner, for the military judges followed no particular rules judges followed no particular rules of procedure and accepted or reject-ed evidence according to their own personal whims. Evidence profilered by Gen, Stoessel to prove his inno-cence was rejected, while witnesses who testified against him were allow-ed to discourse on their impressions for hours together. The whole course of the proceedings of the court-mar-tial led impartial observors to the con-clusion that it was cut and dried be-forehand.

clusion that it was cut and dried be-forehand. Yet this military tribunal, despite its injudicial character, was not able to find Gen. Stoessel guilty of the charges leveled against him, and shuf-ded out of the controversy by admin-istering a reprimand to the accused man. This course ruined Stoessel without exposing his military judges to any disagreeable consequences for causing a miscarriage of justice. Gen. Stoessel left the court, not indeed branded as a coward and traitor, but still with a sufficient stain on his character to render him an outcast from his own class of society forever and ever. nd ever.

SYSTEMATIC PERSECUTION.

SYSTEMATIC PERSECUTION. Shortly after the trial a pamphlet was published in St. Petersburg giving a sensational account of the system-atic persecution of Gen. Stoessel, The author, who signed his full name to his statements of the case de-clared that Gen. Stoessel's hu-miliating downfall was primarily due to a personal quarrel with Peter Dournovo, formerly minister of the interior and the most powerful man in all Russia. Dournovo possessed immense influence and far-reaching connections. According to this pam-phlet, which was entitled "A Terrible Judielal Error," Dournovo concocted a regular conspiracy against Gen. Stoessel, first of all instigating vari-ous cycatures of his corrupt system of rule to bring charges against the defender of Port Arthur and thon instructing his reptile press to dis-seminate the accusations to all ends of the earth.

seminate the accusations to all ends of the earth. This version of the affair was de-scribed in full detail with many ap-parently conclusive proofs and great show of justification. After the pub-lication of this pamphlet Gen. Stoessel challenged Dournovo to a duel, there-by indicating that he himself regard-ed the story of Dournovo's machina-tions accurate him as accurate and tions against him as accurate and rowed with lines of care and his shoulders are bent with the stoop of dejection. He sees no prospect of over being able to prove his innocence, and he is intensely unhappy. Neverthe-less, he is convinced that when the history of the defense of Port Arthur comes to be written in full, it will be seen that he did his duty as a man and as a soldier. SERGIUS VOLKHOVSKY.

AGED ENGLISH WIDOW'S RECORD-BREAKING DIARY.

Special Correspondence. ONDON, Jan. 14 .- So great a task is the keeping of a consequentive diary that few of the millions of people who resolve each year to keep a complete record of their doings from day to day, carry out their purpose. As it is about this season that one is likely to let his New Year resolution slide and blank pages begin to appear in his journal, the remarkable story which has just come to light of the record kept by an old woman in England should prove some stimulant to the careless diarist. Widow Roffey, of Newdigate, near Dorking, possesses a detailed record of everything she has done since she learned to write in the minety-two years she has lived. So accurately has the record been kept, that the old woman can tell to a penny how much money she has spent how. that the old woman can tell to a penny how much money she has spent, how much she has eaten, how many times she has washed her hands and face and bathed her feet, and various other things that ordinary folk never keep track of. For the historian of a thous-and years hence, who will doubtless re-gard our much vaunted civilization as barbaric, this amazing record will con-stitute a vertiable bonarsa of statiststitute a veritable bonanza of statisisitute a vertable bonanza of statisi-ical information. Widow Roffey has just passed her ninety-second birthday. On the an-niversary, she was entertained at din-ner by a friend and there announced some of the totals of her figures to date. The cost of maintenance from first to her ninety-second birthday she figures to be $558-an average expendi-ture of about $2 a week. Bongs which were sung at her birth-day dinner-"A-hunting we will go." and "My old grey mare"-she records as having sung 1,106 times since her fasther taught them to her when a little girl.

girl.

girl. The inventory of clothing which she has worn would make an interesting comparison with a like record from some woman of the extravagant class. some woman of the extravagant class. She has had only forty-seven pettl-coats during her life-forty-one dress-cs, eighty pairs of shoes and 274 pairs of stockings-only three new pairs a year. In bonnets and hats, she kept down to the modest number of 165, or less than two a year. Of aprons she wore 53, shawls and wraps, 34; gloves and mittens, 30; corsets, 63; hair nets, 16; and hairpins just 1.000. Many of these articles were made by her own nimble fingers. Mrs. Roffey says she has eaten 4,784 these articles were made by her own mimble fingers. Mrs. Roffey says she has eaten 4,784 fishes and but little meat, which would indicate that a piscatorial diet is con-ducive both to longevity and firm ad-hesion to good resolutions. Her daily bread amounted to 11,960 loaves, and she has eaten 50,750 potatoes, and 19,-136 cabbages. In tea drinking, the widow did not come up to what is probably the normal

PRECEDENT IN EQUINE LAW.

Special Correspondence

DARIS, Jan. 24-Parisian horses have just had to yield another point in favor of motor driven vehicles.

"Frightened by auto" shall no longer stand as an argument in defence of the steed which is scared at the sight of an automobile. Such is the decision just handed down here by M. Sere de Rivieres, the "good judge" of Paris, in the case of a farmer who sought damages in a runaway accident caused his horses taking fright at a passing auto. The farmer explained to his honor that in trying to control the horses he was thrown from his seat and run over by the cart. The judge held, however, that farmers' horses ought to be too familiar with the sight of a motor car-riage to shy at one, and if the farmers had no motor cars on hand to supply the object lesson, so much the worse for the peasants, added the Solomonic manistrate. magistrate.

figure among the gentle sex, but she credits herself with having drunk 134.-320 cups of the beverage, besides 67.160 glasses of milk and only 33,680 glasses water of water. The old woman was married but once -and in that instance she walked to London and back to have the knot tied -adding 54 miles to the 221,426 she fig-ures out she has walked during her lifetime. The now wrinkled face she has washed 67,060 times; her hands 123,424; and her feet 2,206 times. She has slept 502,220 hours of her life away, drawn 83,584 buckets of water from the well in her garden, cut her finger-nalls 1,656 times and her toe-nails 750 times. Dressing, undressing and arranging times and her toe-halls 750 times. Dressing, undressing and arranging her simple tollet accounted for 67,160 hours of her ninety-two years. She has done up and taken down her hair 2,50 the second states and the relation hours of her inhely-two years. She has done up and taken down her hair 52.480 times. She has wrung the necks of 4,500 chickens, fattened 138 pigs and written 1.104 letters. Her cottage floor she has serubbed 3.998 times, has dug up her little garden 140 times and trimmed the hedge surrounding it 138 times. Only one night has she been away from the humble cottage in which she lives. That was the night following her flight to London to get married. She passed it in her husband's arms beside a haystack. She is a wonder-fully hale old woman, and in her neat round hand she still continues to set down daily the story of her simple life. She has accomplished something ab-solutely unique. Never, surely, since Adam delved and Eve spun, has there been produced such a minute record of a human life.