

TELEGRAPHIC. TILLMAN AND HILL.

Animated Controversy Between the Two Senators.

BONDS, INTEREST AND FLIGHT.

The New York Senator Defends the Administration from Attacks.

Washington, May 1.—In the Senate Tillman took the floor during the discussion of the civil service and he had said, during his brief experience here, that there were some strange things happening in the navy department and all other departments. "It seems to be suffering from too much red tape, too much bureaucracy," said Hill.

Hill entered the chamber and took a seat in front of Tillman. The latter went to refer to Hill's designation of him (Tillman) as a "Pavlov," one of the "trolls of Trinity street."

Hill retorted that he had never called Tillman a "Pavlov," but Hill's retort that it fully compares to a "troll" annoyed him and he claimed that he would rather be in such a state than with certain men on this side who are going to represent the negroes. Tillman then said, "I am not a Pavlov, but I am a troll." Hill responded and said, "I'll prove it before I get through." The South Carolina senator said he came from a state that supported and followed him, and that he could give the word which you either Hill.

Hill bluntly replied, if Tillman meant to say that he could carry the great state of South Carolina this afternoon, Tillman retorted that Hill would win, and turning to Hill said savage, "And that is more than you can do, for the people of this country are not so bad as you say."

After criticizing his losses, Tillman exclaimed, "Yes, force into this thing much farther than we by our reputation of states and interest can." "I have no idea what you have that," responded Hill, "I suppose you'll have losses?"

"Yes, and the blood will be on your hands," responded Tillman.

"I tell you, we are right," Tillman said with a smile. "I have been through it. And I know I knew how the gavel fell."

The senator drew a comparison between Andrew Jackson and Tillman. Tillman said, "The man of the people, he was the man of the people, but Jackson stands at the top of the class." adding that the President represented only money, the almighty dollar. The President had no sympathy for the policy of the south or Ohio (Tillman).

"I never thought," he added, "ever again, the people again, be on their side on this issue. The country is the country of the people." He said, addressing Sherman, "The folks are not well off yet, but they are getting mighty angry."

"Tillman is a God in heaven, and a reckoning must come. We need a purification of politics. They are linked together, Orson Cleveland, John Sherman and John Curtis are all allies."

Hill sat across the aisle, apparently silent. "Perhaps you can baptize the people," he said, addressing Sherman. "The folks are not well off yet, but they are getting mighty angry."

"Tillman is a God in heaven, and a reckoning must come. We need a purification of politics. They are linked together, Orson Cleveland, John Sherman and John Curtis are all allies."

HILL'S REPLY.

When the Senate had adjourned, its break, Mr. Hill, who had been taking notes, took the floor.

At the outset Hill characterized

Tillman's speech as a "remarkable performance, and expressive of the plainer and bolder way of responding to anything that has been said."

The senator has denied here that he was a "Pavlov," but he has said that he has been a "troll" and that he has been a "straight-talking fellow"—not after a pause, "the same other place."

Hill congratulated Tillman, however, on his success in not being a "troll."

As to what the Democratic party would do at Chicago, Hill destined to make a speech in view of the results which will then occur. Hill at present is not in favor of the nomination.

The Senator, in answer, was interrogating his hosts toward maintaining the party's relative position in the national legislature and executive, or the part of the South African Republic. Taking time to question the nature of the native revolt, he said the outcome of the conflict was that the Boers had won, and that further loss of the of the country was not to be expected.

Mr. Vaughan and Atkinson.

Critchlow, May 1.—The Hon. Franklin D. Vaughan, the Democratic candidate for United States senator, for Illinois at the last election, wrote to Mr. Hill, Alton, who represents the 11th district, concerning the rights of the Negroes.

"Do you mind that while Congress is in session, the President has the right of taking negroes in his own hands?" inquired Hill.

"I would expect from a scale where the executive officer is taking the law into his own hands, a hard-earned victory, and defeat would, of course, result in his success and added perplexity to prevent a quick decision."

"No, no," said Hill, "I view the issue as the senator from Newark.

Tillman interrupted to say that when a private bill was introduced, while it was easily passed, it did not receive the support of the Negroes.

"Do that and more than you can do, for the people of this country are not so bad as you say."

"I suppose Hill, I suppose you'll have losses?"

"Yes, and the blood will be on your hands," responded Tillman.

"I tell you, we are right," Tillman said with a smile. "I have been through it. And I know I knew how the gavel fell."

The senator drew a comparison between Andrew Jackson and Tillman. Tillman said, "The man of the people, he was the man of the people, but Jackson stands at the top of the class." adding that the President represented only money, the almighty dollar. The President had no sympathy for the policy of the south or Ohio (Tillman).

"I never thought," he added, "ever again, the people again, be on their side on this issue. The country is the country of the people."

Hill sat across the aisle, apparently silent. "Perhaps you can baptize the people," he said, addressing Sherman. "The folks are not well off yet, but they are getting mighty angry."

"Tillman is a God in heaven, and a reckoning must come. We need a purification of politics. They are linked together, Orson Cleveland, John Sherman and John Curtis are all allies."

Hill's reply.

When the Senate had adjourned, its break, Mr. Hill, who had been taking notes, took the floor.

At the outset Hill characterized

Tillman's speech as a "remarkable performance, and expressive of the plainer and bolder way of responding to anything that has been said."

The senator has denied here that he was a "Pavlov," but he has said that he has been a "troll" and that he has been a "straight-talking fellow"—not after a pause, "the same other place."

Hill was confident, he said, that the United government would take the 17th district as a resource of the party's unpopularity and greatly the friendly relations of the neighboring states.

The Senator, in answer, was interrogating his hosts toward maintaining the party's relative position in the national legislature and executive, or the part of the South African Republic.

Taking time to question the nature of the native revolt, he said the outcome of the conflict was that the Boers had won, and that further loss of the of the country was not to be expected.

Mr. Vaughan and Atkinson.

Critchlow, May 1.—The Hon. Franklin D. Vaughan, the Democratic candidate for United States senator, for Illinois at the last election, wrote to Mr. Hill, Alton, who represents the 11th district, concerning the rights of the Negroes.

"Do you mind that while Congress is in session, the President has the right of taking negroes in his own hands?" inquired Hill.

"I would expect from a scale where the executive officer is taking the law into his own hands, a hard-earned victory, and defeat would, of course, result in his success and added perplexity to prevent a quick decision."

"No, no," said Hill, "I view the issue as the senator from Newark.

Tillman interrupted to say that when a private bill was introduced, while it was easily passed, it did not receive the support of the Negroes.

"Do that and more than you can do, for the people of this country are not so bad as you say."

"I suppose Hill, I suppose you'll have losses?"

"Yes, and the blood will be on your hands," responded Tillman.

"I tell you, we are right," Tillman said with a smile. "I have been through it. And I know I knew how the gavel fell."

The senator drew a comparison between Andrew Jackson and Tillman. Tillman said, "The man of the people, he was the man of the people, but Jackson stands at the top of the class." adding that the President represented only money, the almighty dollar. The President had no sympathy for the policy of the south or Ohio (Tillman).

"I never thought," he added, "ever again, the people again, be on their side on this issue. The country is the country of the people."

Hill sat across the aisle, apparently silent. "Perhaps you can baptize the people," he said, addressing Sherman. "The folks are not well off yet, but they are getting mighty angry."

"Tillman is a God in heaven, and a reckoning must come. We need a purification of politics. They are linked together, Orson Cleveland, John Sherman and John Curtis are all allies."

Hill's reply.

When the Senate had adjourned, its break, Mr. Hill, who had been taking notes, took the floor.

At the outset Hill characterized

Tillman's speech as a "remarkable performance, and expressive of the plainer and bolder way of responding to anything that has been said."

The senator has denied here that he was a "Pavlov," but he has said that he has been a "troll" and that he has been a "straight-talking fellow"—not after a pause, "the same other place."

Hill was confident, he said, that the United government would take the 17th district as a resource of the party's unpopularity and greatly the friendly relations of the neighboring states.

The Senator, in answer, was interrogating his hosts toward maintaining the party's relative position in the national legislature and executive, or the part of the South African Republic.

Taking time to question the nature of the native revolt, he said the outcome of the conflict was that the Boers had won, and that further loss of the of the country was not to be expected.

Mr. Vaughan and Atkinson.

Critchlow, May 1.—The Hon. Franklin D. Vaughan, the Democratic candidate for United States senator, for Illinois at the last election, wrote to Mr. Hill, Alton, who represents the 11th district, concerning the rights of the Negroes.

"Do you mind that while Congress is in session, the President has the right of taking negroes in his own hands?" inquired Hill.

"I would expect from a scale where the executive officer is taking the law into his own hands, a hard-earned victory, and defeat would, of course, result in his success and added perplexity to prevent a quick decision."

"No, no," said Hill, "I view the issue as the senator from Newark.

Tillman interrupted to say that when a private bill was introduced, while it was easily passed, it did not receive the support of the Negroes.

"Do that and more than you can do, for the people of this country are not so bad as you say."

"I suppose Hill, I suppose you'll have losses?"

"Yes, and the blood will be on your hands," responded Tillman.

"I tell you, we are right," Tillman said with a smile. "I have been through it. And I know I knew how the gavel fell."

The senator drew a comparison between Andrew Jackson and Tillman. Tillman said, "The man of the people, he was the man of the people, but Jackson stands at the top of the class." adding that the President represented only money, the almighty dollar. The President had no sympathy for the policy of the south or Ohio (Tillman).

"I never thought," he added, "ever again, the people again, be on their side on this issue. The country is the country of the people."

Hill sat across the aisle, apparently silent. "Perhaps you can baptize the people," he said, addressing Sherman. "The folks are not well off yet, but they are getting mighty angry."

"Tillman is a God in heaven, and a reckoning must come. We need a purification of politics. They are linked together, Orson Cleveland, John Sherman and John Curtis are all allies."

Hill's reply.

When the Senate had adjourned, its break, Mr. Hill, who had been taking notes, took the floor.

At the outset Hill characterized

FREE CREAM CHOCOLATE

A Package Given Each Customer of THE

WITH HER Money-Saving

COFFEE.

SPICES.

Our 50c Teas

and 75c Black

Teas.

Our 50c Coffees

and 75c Black

Coffees.

Our 50c Spices

and 75c Spices.

Our 50c Cream and 75c Cream.

Our 50c Chocolate and 75c Chocolate.

Our 50c Cinnamon

and 75c Cinnamon.

Our 50c Nutmeg

and 75c Nutmeg.

Our 50c Cloves

and 75c Cloves.

Our 50c Allspice

and 75c Allspice.

Our 50c Sassafras

and 75c Sassafras.

Our 50c Peppermint

and 75c Peppermint.

Our 50c Cloves

and 75c Cloves.

Our 50c Nutmeg

and 75c Nutmeg.

Our 50c Sassafras

and 75c Sassafras.

Our 50c Peppermint

and 75c Peppermint.

Our 50c Cloves

and 75c Cloves.

Our 50c Nutmeg

and 75c Nutmeg.

Our 50c Sassafras

and 75c Sassafras.

Our 50c Peppermint

and 75c Peppermint.

Our 50c Cloves

and 75c Cloves.

Our 50c Nutmeg

and 75c Nutmeg.

Our 50c Sassafras

and 75c Sassafras.

Our 50c Peppermint

and 75c Peppermint.

Our 50c Cloves

and 75c Cloves.

Our 50c Nutmeg

and 75c Nutmeg.

Our 50c Sassafras

and 75c Sassafras.

Our 50c Peppermint

and 75c Peppermint.

Our 50c Cloves

and 75c Cloves.

Our 50c Nutmeg

and 75c Nutmeg.

Our 50c Sassafras

and 75c Sassafras.

Our 50c Peppermint

and 75c Peppermint.

Our 50c Cloves

and 75c Cloves.

Our 50c Nutmeg

and 75c Nutmeg.

Our 50c Sassafras

and 75c Sassafras.

Our 50c Peppermint

and 75c Peppermint.

Our 50c Cloves

and 75c Cloves.

Our 50c Nutmeg

and 75c Nutmeg.

Our 50c Sassafras

and 75c Sassafras.

Our 50c Peppermint

and 75c Peppermint.

Our 50c Cloves

and 75c Cloves.

Our 50c Nutmeg

and 75c Nutmeg.

Our 50c Sassafras

and 75c Sassafras.

Our 50c Peppermint

and 75c Peppermint.

Our 50c Cloves

and 75c Cloves.

Our 50c Nutmeg

and 75c Nutmeg.

Our 50c Sassafras

and 75c Sassafras.

Our 50c Peppermint

and 75c Peppermint.

Our 50c Cloves

and 75c Cloves.

Our 50c Nutmeg

and 75c Nutmeg.

Our 50c Sassafras

and 75c Sassafras.

Our 50c Peppermint