MONUMENTS.

people.

THIS Is a great country. It is said that it has not been all fenced in yet. We are fifty millions of people, which is a great number. We excel other nations in many respects, but the future historian will no doubt record that our superior excellence and distinguishing characteristic was a determined and unconquerable disposition to apread ourselves on monuments. Whenever a great deed is performed, it must be graven in monumental marble.

In monumental marble. There is one feature about our monumental work, however, which is peculiar to America. We are very enthusiastic. When we want a monument, we want it badly. We are not content to walt the ordinary course of construction, but our en-thusiasm bubbles up an boils over, thusiasm bubbles up an boils over, also his resolution to representa-tives plan and publish and procla-mate till the great republic is worked up to fever heat and

This has all been destroyed. Word has been sent to all the in habitants of the valley to prepare for the worst. The flood at this time will prove more disastrous than the great flood of last spring. The la ge crop on the bottom lands had not yet been secured, and hundreds of thousands of bushels will be lost, and to add to the general destruction, the rise in the river has come on the so suddenly and so unexsectedly that the bottoms are still full of cattle, horses and other live stock. It will be impossible to save either grain or live stock, and in many cases farmers will loce their household effects. 37 note is unanswerable, nevertheless fails to see why there should be any repugnance to allowing England of France to join in the guarantee. Mr. Blaine's assumption that the Amer ican possessions on the Pacific would supply the larger part of the traffic of the caual is very questionable. Indeed it scarcely admits of doubt that the great bulk of the vessels which for some years to come would pass through the car al would be English. Great though the inter-ests of America are on this matter and necessary though it is for her that there should be free communi cation between her Atlantic and
