AN ANTI-MORMON RAID.

THE ring that has ruled Onida County, Idaho, is reduced to desperate straits. The action of the Democratic Convention at Boise in sustaining the delegates represented by Hon. J. H. Hart, and rejecting the bogus delegates with their bogus credentials and bogus claims, was a home-burner in the camp of the conspirators. They can see that the prospects ahead are very unfavorable for their continued manipulation of county affairs and finances, and that the probability is the people will regain possession of the power to elect their own officers.

But those baronsies on the ship of Onida were unable to let go if they can help it. Schemes are in operation to win the majority which are so much in the majority that their united vote must carry the election. Against legitimate opposition and honorable tactics they have nothing to object. But we do protest against the outrage upon a number of presumed supporters of the Democratic cause, which has recently been perpetrated and which was inspired by the Malar ring. We allude to the wholesale arrest of lumbermen and timber cutters, in the mountains above Malar, and their illegal incarceration in jail.

These men had been engaged for some time past in getting out lime and lumber, principally for the Utah and Northern extension. The first movement against them was the arrest of Hyrum Smith, son of Judge Smith, of Brigham City, who was acting as foreman over a number of the cutters. The charge was, cutting timber on the Indian reservation. Mr. Smith was incarcerated to await trial on this trumped-up accusation. The next step was a raid into the mountains by Deputy Marshals, for the arrest of all the "Mormons" they could find in the timber regions. Between fifty and sixty were brought down in a drove to Malar City and huddled into cells, where they have been cooped up without proper food and without covering from the cold at night. It is stated that some of these men were wanted as witnesses in the Smith case, and the officer sent after them, not knowing the men, asked questions which they refused to answer. He was then instructed to arrest them all. It does not appear that they were charged with any offense but refusing to answer. If this is correct, the proceedings are as ridiculous as they are outrageous.

Be this as it may, the nearest point on the Indian reservation is at least four miles distant from the place where they were arrested. The railroad station is blocked in consequence of the stoppage of the cutting. And the whole affair is a "job" put up by the Malar ring which appear to have captured Judge Hollister, who is now temporarily filling the place of Judge Prickett in that district. We are surprised at this, because Judge Hollister has generally exhibited fairness and justice in his official course in Idaho, and has never manifested so far as we are aware, any disposition to stretch the law or play into the hands of the "Mormon-eaters."

We understand that the matter has been presented to Attorney General Devens, who has telegraphed instructions to the District Attorney at Malar, being convinced that the accused were cutting timber on the reservation, but had the right to cut for the railroad in the locality where they were at work.

We are of the opinion that the chief actors in this deplorable piece of sharp practice will be very sorry before they get through with the affair, that they suffered their spleen to get the better of their judgment. They will fall in the object for which they rushed into this illegal course, and the high-handed outrage in which they are the chief conspirators will cost them considerably more money than they can make. Judge Hollister should be careful not to identify himself with any clique or party. The Bench is expected to be incorruptible, impartial and above the reach of political or religious prejudices.

GUILTY, OR NOT GUILTY?

MADISON, Connecticut, a quiet and pretty little New England village, has been for nearly a month in a state of the most intense excitement. On the 3rd ult., a young woman, named Mary E. Stannard, went into a small wood near where she lived, with the avowed intention of gathering blackberries. Five hours afterward, her father, feeling uneasy at her absence, went in search of her and found her dead at the foot of a knoll partly screened by a birch tree, with blood still flowing from a ghastly wound in her neck. The body was borne to her father's residence, an inquest was held, and the verdict was to the effect that she was murdered by some person or persons to the jury unknown.

But the whole village was agitated, and inquiries were prosecuted which resulted in the direction of the finger of strong suspicion towards Rev. Herbert Hayden, the Methodist minister of Madison. He had been a frequent visitor at Stannard's house; the girl had lived with his wife's help; she had told her sister, Susan Stannard, that she was likely to become a mother and that Hayden was the author of her trouble; and on the day of the murder had in formed her sister that she had an appointment to meet Mr. Hayden, but wanted her father to think she was going to gather berries.

Hayden was arrested, and when examination commenced before Judge Wilcox, the case looked very black for the accused. His pocket knife, when examined by an expert, was found to contain in the joint and crevices corpuscles of human blood. The wound was apparently made by such a knife, by a person who had knowledge of the position of the Jugular vein, after the victim had been struck on the head with a stone. The deceased had written a letter to her sister from Guilford, a few days before the murder, but reached home before it arrived. It contained a letter enclosed for Mr. Hayden, which she put in to the fire before her sister could read it. Several persons remembered the preacher's leaving a church vester supper, some months previously, at which his wife was present, and going to his house where Mary was then staying. He had spoken to her at her father's well on the morning of the day of the murder, and the inference was that, knowing the condition she was in, through his villainy, he had an opportunity to reach her in a secret place, struck her down with a rock, stole for the Jugular vein and opened it with his penknife.

The other side of the case was, that a post mortem examination showed that deceased was not en-cicled. Evidence was pretty favorable that about the time of the murder the minister was engaged at his residence, nearly a mile from the spot, moving a pile of wood. Hayden's wife swore that the penknife in question was in the house all the day of the murder, and that her little boy cut his finger with it and hence the blood corpuscles. The Judge ruled out the testimony of the deceased girl's sister as to statements made to her not in the presence of the defendant. Mr. Hayden testified that her husband went home at the close of the supper, and at her request, to put the children to bed, and that he was not gone ten minutes. There was no direct evidence that Hayden ever had any improper relations with the girl. The letter written to him may have been a proper one for advice from a girl to her pastor, and the consequence was that the defendant was discharged.

But previous to the close of the case, the prosecuting attorney desired to introduce some rebuttal testimony, which he was not ready with, and therefore asked a continuance, which was not granted; he also considered that the testimony of the conversation with the deceased girl's sister was improperly excluded, and believing that the Judge was prejudiced in favor of the accused, he withdrew from the case.

Mr. Hayden's congregation, almost without exception, believed in his innocence and received him back with demonstrations of joy. But there is a probability that the case will be reopened, as the prosecuting attorney claims to have newly discovered evidence implicating the minister. Mr. Hayden preserved a calm, unruffled and dignified demeanor throughout, but there are still grave suspicions hanging over him which nothing but a full and complete investigation will settle. This may yet occur, but in careful examination the full reports of the case, we fail to discover any evidence of sufficient importance and clearness to brand the preacher with the terrible crimes of adultery and murder.

BY TELEGRAPH.

EASTERN.
NEW YORK, 4.—The Sun has the following on the boat race: While from an international standpoint the race between Hannon and the American was a matter of course, interest among the rowing men, it was less than the excitement was caused by the fact that the American was a member of a prominent family. It has been said, the public will never know it, but the race was a contest between the money won in the pool room.
