GRADUATE NURSE ANSWERS TRIBUNE

Says There is No Cause for Objection To Register System, Which Has Long Been Used.

A graduate nurse, who is not a Mormon, writes to the "Tribune" upon the subject of "The Nurses' Trust," regarding which the Tribune endeavored to arouse public sentiment a few days ago, and expresses the view of many in her own letter, which follows:

To the editor of the "Deseret News": Dear Sir:—As a graduate nurse who is not a Mormon, I should like to express on the courtesy of the "Deseret News" sufficiently to express my views on the question of a "Nurses' Trust."

Personally I am entirely in favor of the plan, and I think that I have a greater right to speak on the subject inasmuch as I cannot be accused of any religious sympathies. The question of religion should be entirely eliminated from the discussion. It is to see that behind the allusion to "politics," "underground wire pulling," in the views quoted in the "Tribune" of Aug. 21, he has the dearest sense of "Church influence," which would facilitate the calling of nurses to their places, irrespective of the creed of the introducer.

The Groves L. D. S. hospital is perfectly justified in recognizing the principle of the closed register. The thing on a simple business footing and there is no injustice apparent. The nurses who so strongly object now to entering their names at more than one register, did not find it hard to do so recently as last year to register at two or even three drug stores.

The argument that hospital nurses are injured by being "mixed in" with the practical nurses, who are to hold water. There is no "mixing" possible. Each occupies a well defined position in the mind of the doctor, with whom usually rests the decision of choosing a nurse suitable for the case and he will neither force upon his needy patients (except in a case of life and death) a nurse whose fees are far beyond their means, nor will he force upon the patient willing to pay for the best help obtainable shall accept an inefficient substitute.

This system of a graded register has been used in the United States for many years, and why it should prove impracticable in Salt Lake is beyond my comprehension. And why the eastern nurse should be so overcome with horror at meeting here the conditions to which she has been accustomed elsewhere, as to be compelled to leave the city, is also inexplicable.

The objection of the physician quoted in the Tribune, comparing the graded register to university clubs, scientific societies, etc., is also untenable. The university club has a parallel in the nursing profession, but it is the nurses' association and not the register at all. Practical nurses, so far as I know, have no wish to enter the nurses' association. They would be out of place among hospital traditions, and probably would cause a scandal. They certainly supply a real need, for were they banished, and the hospital nurse left in possession of the field, the county would be bound to remunerate the latter for her work around the city, who certainly could not be left without help.

I notice that the graduate nurse whose opinion is quoted in the Tribune states that the central graded register would resolve itself into a collection of puppets, the strings to be pulled by Mrs. Empey, under the direction of the "powers that be," and that the individual nurse would have no more liberty of speech or action than if she were really an automaton.

In this connection it is safe to refer to past records, where they will bear looking into, and if any action can be brought against Mrs. Empey, teaching her impartiality or absolute fairness during the many years she has managed a register, I have yet to learn of it.

It is the nurse who makes herself successful or otherwise, and as a leading physician said to me when I first came to Salt Lake, "A good nurse is a nurse in demand, and will never have difficulty in obtaining work as soon as she becomes known."
