

CAPTURE OF TRAIN ROBBERS.

AT about two o'clock this morning, Heber P. Kimball, J. Quincy Knowlton and Riley Judd arrived in town having in their custody two men who are supposed to be two of the four men who robbed the Central Pacific train, and who were seen at Deep Creek lately. Theodore F. Tracy, Esq., agent of Wells, Fargo & Co., in this city, had spoken to Heber about going out west, raising a posse of men and making an effort to find these robbers. In company with his wife and her sister, and J. Quincy Knowlton, he left the city yesterday morning in a carriage for Grantsville, expecting to leave the ladies there, and from that point take his measures to find the robbers if possible. When they reached the forks of the road beyond the Point of the Mountain, they saw the stage coming and found that Riley Judd, Heber's brother-in-law, was aboard. Heber hailed him, and requested him to go back with him to Grantsville. Riley said he could not very well do so as he had some letters which ought to come to the city. Just then they saw two horsemen approaching from the West, and as they thought the letters could be sent by them Riley got off the stage and accompanied them. When the horsemen saw them, they wheeled out of the road as if to avoid; but seeing it was a carriage containing ladies, they turned back into the road. When they met, Heber inquired if they were going to the city and could take some letters. One replied that one of them was, but the other would not go in for two or three days. Some further conversation ensued, during which they remarked that they had been mining in Skull Valley. What they said aroused Heber's suspicions. He inquired if they had heard about the Railroad being robbed. They replied they had not, and wanted to know if the robbers had been caught. He said no; but added, "You answer the description very well, and I guess we'll take you;" at the same moment, having got out of the carriage during the conversation, he seized the horse by the bridle and brought his pistol to bear upon the man.

The other one started his horse into a gallop and rode off as hard as he could. He was followed by J. Quincy Knowlton, who mounted the captured man's horse and gave chase, the fellow having, however, got about two miles the start of him. He succeeded in getting so close to him that he could have shot him, if he had wished; but being alone with him he thought to do so would be unwise, and continued the chase. By this time they had reached the vicinity of E. T. City, and in passing through the slough or irrigating canal, the supposed robber threw away what seemed to be saddle bags, and shortly afterwards Quincy captured him. He searched the water and all around for sometime for the saddle-bags, but could not find them.

In the meantime the other supposed robber had been taken to a house belonging to, or near that of Bishop Lorenzo Young, and was kept there under guard by Riley Judd, while Heber mounted one of his team horses, and went down the road to assist Quincy in securing the other man. When they got ready to bring them on to the city they proposed to tie them; but no sooner did the first one caught hear the proposition than he made a desperate effort to get away. He ran towards the mill pond. One of the boys fired the shotgun at his legs; but it was loaded with fine shot, and only two or three of them hit him. They finally caught him, but he only submitted after he received several raps on the head from the butt end of a pistol.

We are indebted to officer Phillips for the above particulars. Heber, Quincy and Riley having started out west with the intention of trying to find the other men. A company of U. S. Cavalry, from Camp Douglas also started in search of the robbers. Alfred Barstow, Esq., the U. S. special mail agent, made application yesterday to the General Commanding for the aid of the cavalry; but orders had to be received from Washington by General Morrow before he could send them with such an outfit as to make their services available. It is altogether likely that the other two will shortly be captured.

As soon as Mr. Barstow heard the intelligence of the robbery, through a dispatch from Superintendent Towne, he immediately took train and came out on the line until he met the train which had been plundered and obtained all the information which he could from the men who were aboard. Since then he has been indefatigable in his exertions to obtain clues to their movements and to have them arrested. He has used the telegraph freely, and its aid has contributed greatly to the arrest of these two who are now here. Through his kindness we have been favored with the perusal of the statement of one of the captured men, the one who is wounded, which Mr. B. wrote down as he gave it. Mr. Barstow took the precaution before receiving it to warn him that if he did not tell the truth, any statement he might make would only damage him; if he would give him a true account he would do all he could consistently for him.

The man answers the description of one of the robbers, Wm. Harvey, and he had upon his person, at the time of his capture a pair of gloves marked "W. H. Harvey;" but he denies that he is Harvey. He says he traveled and slept with the latter, who gave him these gloves. His name he says is Leander Morton and that is the signature which he has affixed to the written statement. Harvey, in the published description of the robbers, is described as 23 years old; this man says he is 28 years of age. He admits nothing that would show, on its face, that he was a party to the robbery of the train; but there are several points of his statement, as to his movements, and where he stopped, which agree with the information in the possession of Mr. Barstow respecting the movements of the robbers.

When shown the capture marked "Wm. Harvey, Co. I, 3rd U. S. Cavalry" which was found by Mr. B. in the debris picked up by the men on the train after the robbery, he denied ever having seen it before. He is "an honest miner" according to his own account; and if it be doubted, he wants an officer to be sent for from Fort Halleck who is acquainted with Harvey, that he may be confronted with him, and then it will be easily proved that he is not the man.

In his saddle-bags at the time of his capture he had $126 in greenbacks, $300 in gold coin, $3.50 in silver, a package of gold dust weighing a little over 37 ounces, and another package weighing nearly 28 ounces. This gold dust and U. S. Currency he said he had traded for; but, unfortunately for him, the dust is Boise dust, the kind which was stolen from Wells, Fargo & Co's treasure; and another unfortunate feature for him is that the numbers on all the greenbacks found on him are defaced! A gold chain was found upon him. This he called a fob chain; but it is not. It is a piece of a new gold neck chain which has evidently been cut in four pieces—this piece being about one-fourth the length. In his statement he admits that his traveling companion had a pair of saddle-bags also. This, we understand, the other denies; but there is no doubt he succeeded in throwing them off when he was chased.

The other captured man says his name is Baker; but he answers to the description, Mr. Barstow thinks, of Haff, one of the robbers of the train. When captured they stated they were strangers to each other, but afterwards they manifested an anxiety to converse with each other, which Heber P. Kimball checked, informing them it was scarcely a suitable time for them to make each other's acquaintance then. Baker, or Haff, heard something about the mail robbery which had been committed near Nephi, and that one of the parties engaged in that had told all he knew about it, or turned State's evidence. He remarked, in the hearing of his companion, Morton, or Harvey, and as was thought with the intention that what he said should be heard by him, that if a companion of his were to serve him so, he would kill him if he had to do it in the Court Room; or if he was a friend of the man who was thus informed upon he would kill the man who "squawked."

If these men are not the robbers of the train then it is altogether likely they are guilty of some other crime; for innocent men do not run away if accused of robbery; neither are they under the necessity of telling different and conflicting stories about their movements. They do not usually travel with such large amounts of money and gold dust about them, and do not find it necessary to deface all the numbers of the currency which they carry. Mr. Barstow and Mr. Theodore F. Tracy expressed to us their confidence that they are two of the robbers. Carr, the murderer of the woman at Fort Halleck, is still at large, and whether Harvey is the soldier who conspired with him to let him escape and who went off with him, or not, we cannot learn. But we hope that in a few days all of them will be in custody.

We are gratified with the promptness with which the capture of these men has been effected, and especially that, having come into our Territory, they have been arrested by the vigilance of our citizens. Men of this class will get the idea after awhile, probably, that Utah is the most unsafe place on the Continent for them to be in, and will give it a wide berth. We hope so at least. The arrest of these robbers, and the capture of six of those who stopped the other train, will have the effect to check "road agents" in their desperate game, and to show them that, wide and sparsely settled as the Great Basin is, it is not a very favorable region for their operations.

A RECENT number of the Canterbury (New York) Press, contains an account of a singular posterial spasm, found on the 18th of September last, by a Mr. Thomas B. Barker, on the beach at Long Look-out Point, Little Alaska Bay, in that colony. It was called a "frost fish," of which the following is the description and dimensions: Length twelve feet and six inches; girth one foot and eleven inches. The head was armed on the crown with two long spears, remarkably thin, and about two feet long. There was also a similar spear on each side of the lower jaw, not quite so long, projecting outward and downward, at an acute angle to the jaw. The Press says that a frost fish of that size had not been seen in that locality before.
