HUNT OF THE "ETATA," ACCORDING TO THE "STANDARD."

The London "Times" Believes that Russia Will Soonly Withdraw £3,000,000.

By Telegraph to the NEWS.

A SUCCESSION OF CRIMES.

What a French Widower Did to Obtain a Wife.

PARIS, May 15. — The police of Lanlers have arrested a man named Meunier for murder and other crimes. Meunier, who is an ex-officer of customs and widower with two sons, courted a wealthy girl named Jaquet, who rejected him because he was poor. Meunier then engaged in a number of robberies and, finally, murdered a priest and his servant. Having got some money, he renewed his suit, but the girl's mother objected to the man's children. Meunier thereupon set fire to the girl's residence, the occupants of which had a narrow escape. Meunier had not been detected in any of these crimes. After another interview with the girl, who then seemed to be willing to marry him, he smothered his eldest boy and, finally, shot and seriously injured the girl's brother, who had forbidden the proposed marriage. When arrested, Meunier confessed to all but the double murder.

The "Etata" Hunt.

LONDON, May 15.—The Standard in an editorial this morning says: We can only account for the Americans' extraordinary zeal in pursuing the Chilian steamer Etata on the assumption that the government is delighted at having an opportunity of retrospectively justifying its Alabama contention as against England. It is doubtful, however, whether this ingenious device can establish any new dictum in the international law.

Influenza in Russia and England.

LONDON, May 15.—The influenza epidemic is seriously interfering in South Russia. In Russian Poland the disease has decimated the population of many villages. The influenza is spreading among the members of the English parliament, and eighty-four members of the commons are now reported suffering from the disease.

Another Version of the attack on the Prince.

BERLIN, May 15.—The latest report received by the Japanese legation here concerning the attack on the czarewitch is that he and Prince George were returning incognito from a place of amusement, when they came in conflict with the police officers who asserted themselves too vigorously until the identity of the princes were revealed. The police were present ostensibly to protect the imperial escort at the time. The slightness of the czarewitch's wound is explained by the fact that Japanese policemen use blunt swords.

Russia Wants Money.

LONDON, May 15.—The Times believes the Russian government will withdraw 3,000,000 pounds from London within the next month or two, and that it is doubtful whether the Bank of England will be able to draw that amount from America. Besides which, adds the Times, there is a strong probability of a partial failure of the European crops, which would cause a drain of gold to America in the autumn.

The "Esmeralda" Steaming North.

CITY OF MEXICO, May 15.—A dispatch received this last night from Acapulco says that the Chilian cruiser Esmeralda entered this port yesterday, and sailed again today. Several of the officers were ashore and used the wires and made various inquiries regarding the action of the United States, showing that they were informed that the cruiser Charleston had been sent in pursuit of the Etata. She steamed north to intercept the Etata and to protect her, should the Charleston attempt to capture her.

The officers who came ashore were very reticent, but from one of the sailors it was learned that they expected to sight the Etata and act as her escort down the coast. The Esmeralda has a numerous crew and in appearance they are veterans and will fight. The above dispatch was confirmed at the War Department, but the officers are inclined to be reticent. A prominent official said the cruiser was warned not to remain in port, as Mexico would not be harboring insurgent vessels and did not recognize anything except that that of Balmaceda.

The evidence given at the trials, which have recently been taking place, by several prominent Manipur insurgents, captured by the British troops, prove that the chief commissioner and his colleagues were beheaded by the public executioner by order of the Manipur major. These men were found guilty by the military tribunal which has been in session at Manipur.

WHITE TO BLACK.

STRANGE METAMORPHOSIS BY DISEASE.

Perhaps nothing in the history of medical treatment on the Pacific coast for the pains and ills the flesh is heir to has created more interest and speculation in professional circles than the case of George L. Shurtevant, who died last week in West Berkeley, after three years' illness, from that mysterious ailment known as Addison's disease of the suprarenal capsules of the kidneys.

The subject gathers interest from the fact that the disease is comparatively unknown in this country, Shurtevant's case being the first on record in California, and only the seventy-eighth in the United States.

The unhappy victim of this disease was the son of C. W. Shurtevant, an interpreter of the Merchants' Exchange. He was 21 years of age. Three years ago, when the disease first became manifest, Shurtevant's clear and transparent skin was his most admired and manly beauty. At the time of his death his body was as black as that of a full-blood negro. The first intimation of the approach of the disease was the appearance on the tongue of black, pigment formations of the size of a lead pencil head. Two months afterward others appeared to the gums, and the skin assumed the sallow hue characteristic of jaundice. He was treated for liver complaint for nearly a year, when his parents became dissatisfied with the progress of the cure, called a consultation of the most eminent physicians in San Francisco, who after a careful diagnosis declared the ailment to be Addison's disease. The young man's death warrant was thus virtually signed.

Mr. Shurtevant immediately moved to West Berkeley on the advice of the physicians, in order that the patient might have seclusion. His purchased a pretty cottage that stands in a perfect bower of roses on the San Pablo road, and to this charming retreat his son was taken to die. Young Shurtevant did not know until the hour of death the fatal character of his disease, but imagined himself a martyr to jaundice.

In the second year his skin began to change from a saffron to a bronzed brown tint, and in the third year, or last stage of the disease, from the chest down it assumed a deep black hue, not unlike that of the Apache, while the face and upper part of the body took on a dull brown color. The tongue also became as black as that of a gorilla. The extreme tips of the fingers, however, retained their natural color.

During all this time he never suffered pain, and there was no perceptible loss of flesh. On the other hand, to quote his own words, he was constantly possessed of a "rebellious feeling of hunger," and his days were passed in roaming about the garden, at the piano or with his books.

Shurtevant's case had one remarkable peculiarity which has been a source of study to the physicians. The extreme limit of life in Addison's disease is three years. In a majority of cases the patient passes quietly away in the second year in his sleep, but if the second stage be passed safely, the patient nearly invariably becomes insane during the third year, and death ensues in a few years. Shurtevant at no stage manifested symptoms of insanity, although his watchers were constantly prepared for an outbreak. He passed quietly away.

Among the many theories known to the boy's father was besieged with requests from physicians and medical colleges for an autopsy of the body in the interest of science, but the mother objected so strenuously that the permission was refused, and a guard was placed over the grave to prevent its desecration.

Prior to 1856 little was known of this dreadful disease. In that year Dr. Addison, the famous English surgeon, gave his theory to the world: "A dissolution of the suprarenal capsules which form the protection of the kidneys." Death ensues when the decomposition is complete. There is no known cause for the disease, which has baffled the skill of the most eminent physicians of the two hemispheres. But one other case is recorded in the history of the Pacific Coast States—that of a woman who died at Carson, Nev., twelve years ago, after an illness of two years. The disease is most prevalent on the west coast of England. —S. F. Chronicle.

WHAT GLOVES ARE MADE OF.

HOW THE WORLD IS RANSACKED FOR SUITABLE MATERIAL.

"Many of the gloves that are sold in the country under the comprehensive title of 'kid,'" said a glove manufacturer, "are really made of goatskin. There is hardly a country in the world that does not supply some sort of material which are made up into gloves and many of which pass for kid in the retail stores. The supply of skins of the finest quality is naturally limited. The greater part is absorbed in the manufacture of women's gloves. Men's gloves, therefore, are frequently made of fine buckskin, which is better than the second-rate kid. The genuine, fine kidskins are mainly of French origin, and these obtained from the mountain slopes of Southern France are world-famed for their excellence. All the best conditions of climate, air and diet appear to unite exactly the degree required to secure perfection in this district. Nowhere else are the conditions equally favorable, although kidskins of great excellence are produced throughout the mountain ranges of Southern Europe. Their production is the principal industry among the mountaineers.

"Great pains must be taken to secure the softness and delicacy of texture and freedom from blemish which form the value of the kidskins. The diet is the most important factor and mother's milk is required to keep the kid in perfect condition. If the animal is allowed to eat the grass it relishes, as the skin immediately begins to grow harder and coarser in texture. To keep the skin in perfect condition the young kid is kept closely penned and carefully guarded against injury from scratches, bruises, and so on. As soon as the kids have reached the age at which their skins are in the best condition for the glover, they are killed and the skins are sold to traveling peddlers, who beat them to the great centres of the tanning industry at Grenoble, Annuay, Milhau and Paris.

"Fine lambskins are raised in great quantities in southern Europe and throughout Hungary, Servia, Bulgaria and Roumania. The American glovemakers buy most of their lambskins at Vienna or Stuttgart.

"London is the chief market of all the miscellaneous skins. Here may be found the cape sheepskins, tough and durable, from the Cape of Good Hope; colt and calfskins from Buenos Ayres and other cities of South America; hogskins from Mexico and Brazil; antelope from India, Brazil, Colorado and Africa. Of late years many of these skins have been brought directly to New York, and American buyers no longer find it necessary to go to London. While fine lambskins are the staple in men's gloves, calfskins are rapidly coming into favor, and fine calfskins are also extensively used. Each has a grain peculiar to itself, which, while not visible to the ordinary buyer, can be instantly perceived by the expert.

"Calfskins are good-looking, soft and pliable, but are apt to crack. This fault is not found in calfskins, which are durable and handsome, and in many respects make model gloves. The wrinkles are objectionable, but these disappear when the glove is on the hands. The 'pekin' of Venezuela contribute the majority of deerskins at present. The caster comes from the antelopes of the West. Heavy leather gloves are obtained from elks. Hogskins are used to a moderate extent. Pairs of Calcutta ox hides are also used.

Every invoice of heavy skins contains more or less curiosities, and the kind of leather that will be evolved from a stray moose, mouse, llama, or kangaroo skin depends upon the skins that accompany it. Dogskins are occasionally made up into gloves, but their use is very uncommon. Everything that goes by the name of dogskin nowadays is likely to be Cape sheep. Rabbits gloves are about as frequent as rat suites in Chinese laundries.—New York Sun.
