

Two dates of paramount importance have dominated the week in the social realm, that of the symphony concert and Hallowe'en. The former was perhaps of predominating interest, no other performance being so long lasting having witnessed the same interest in all others. Not only did the interests exist in private parties, but from all the great educational institutions parties were made up for the afternoon, as sound with music and laughter. The lower floor was covered with rugs and furnished with chairs and settees, while a whole center filled with apples, a barrel of sides, and pumpkin pie were also in evidence. The last was served in plates, and the various Hallowe'en games and contests taking place during the evening.

The phantom party given at the Elk's club house Thursday was one of the most successful affairs of the night, figures in ghostly costumes assembling at the
