

Sensible Advice About Boys.

We never could understand why so many persons experience such trouble with their boys. We like boys, and think we could select almost any little chap from the street and make a good man of him in time. Almost any child requires to be interested in something; if you let him loaf in the streets nine chances out of ten he will become interested in something detrimental to his moral life; if you put him on the right track he will be just as much interested. And almost any mother or father, by a few experiments, can learn what worthy way will attract their child. Give him books, talk over different subjects—you can very soon detect what interests the child—then follow the lead and give him all the advantages he craves. You will find, in time, that it is money in your pocket to keep your boy thus away from bad company and mischief. We expend so much money for our own amusement in parties, concerts, theatres, and so on, and leave our boys to the mercy of school life and street associations!

Give your boy a bit of land, some farming tools, even to raise a few flowers or vegetables; or a chest of mechanical tools, scientific apparatus, with specimens, a lens, magnet, microscope. Test all the latent possibilities, and you will yet have a boy to be proud of, even though he be reared in San Francisco. A capable, manly boy is worth thinking about. Keep him busy about something interesting and you need have no trouble. We stood in a corner grocery the other day when some little, rough, ragged boys came in. They were all smoking; here they met a school companion and urged him to take some tobacco to make a cigarette. "I don't use the article," was the manly reply. We made up our mind that that boy had a mother who cared for her children. When we see mothers leaving their children day after day to hired nurses, and leaving them evening after evening to find their own way of passing time, and knowing the temptations ever offered children, we wonder so many select the half-way compromise between good and evil.

How does any one accept parentage without its attendant responsibilities? Is a pure life of so little consequence? We hear parents say, "I cannot manage my boy." We always want to reply, "It is your own fault." We have known people who acted as though the life of their children for good or evil was not worth a few years of self-denial! It should not be self-denial, either, but pleasure, for the parent to guide the child.

Above all things, interest the boys in their studies. Almost every place in geography has a local history—a story that can be told to fix it in the memory. The family accounts can be handed over to the young arithmetician, and very soon mathematics will assume a personal interest. So in writing and spelling—let kind letters open the way, and the boy will soon excel. It is so easy to learn happily.—San Francisco Call.

Emancipating Himself.

In removing Judge McKean, of Utah, because of his "undue severity and disposition to go beyond his judicial functions," Grant's clear, good sense shows out from a long eclipse on this subject. "Undue severity" and "disposition to go beyond judicial function" is an exceeding mild way of putting it, but if it secures his removal, it suffices. The plain truth is, "Judge" McKean has acted like a bigot ever since he went to Utah. He was appointed at the instance of Doctor Newman, who openly expressed his desire that the Mormons should be "rooted out" by any and all means. McKean went out as Paul went toward Damascus, "breathing threatenings and slaughter." He instituted suits against Brigham Young and one Hawkins, for polygamy, before he had been there a month, pressed the cases against them to conviction, and sentenced them to a severe fine and imprisonment. But so plain was his disregard of law in his anxiety to secure conviction that the Supreme Court at once reversed all his decisions, and the polygamists got free.

Foiled in this attempt, he waited till he got his chance by the help of * * * to prosecute Brigham Young again. Entertaining the suit for divorce without question, * * * McKean required Brigham to pay her $3,000 down and $500 a month, (commencing twenty months back) as alimony pending the issue of the suit. And because Brigham hesitated to pay this most exorbitant sum, he was clapped into jail without ceremony! It may be all very well to "put down the Mormons," though we fail to discover any warrant for so doing in Christ's precepts or example—but to "put them down" by outrageous violations of law, justice and common charity, should commend itself to no one who professes the Christian tenets. And we rejoice to see that even Grant has revolted from the domination of the spiritual adviser who was bold and bad enough to incite him to put down the Mormons, right or wrong.—Pittsburgh, Pa., Leader, March 17.
