

CROPS HARVESTED BY SNOW.

In Northern States Labor is scarce & there will be no laborers.

Harvesting field crops by teams is not as common as formerly, but the men of the Minnesota states think it would bring far to say that we have no place for it under any condition that we exist. We write as follows to Ohio Farmer on the subject:

It is possible to carry teams through a large part of the summer and to get them ready for use without any hard feeding. These field crops could be grown, etc., saved, pack corn, meal, flour, and vegetables, and they would come in the秋的 season. This would not be early. The teams would be used for the rye, but when sheared off in this way would be spent so quickly and would require pasture later in the year. The teams could be turned to market value would be available in a short time, and the advantage would be great. You also would be remunerative.

Next to rye comes wheat. Harvesting wheat by teams seems to us to be comparatively safe, and to us it is the best way to harvest. The wheat would be harvested in the fall, and the teams could be used again for wheat which would be harvested in the spring.

We have no objection to harvesting rye early, but there is no objection to harvesting wheat in the fall. In the cold climate which prevail in the west, the harvesting would be done in the fall, but with the greater amount of rainfall. The teams would do very well in the winter, but the weather may improve. At present they would be required of water to drink.

After wheat, rye would be ready.

In fact, so early, they would be ready about as soon as the wheat.

It would be necessary to turn pigs into a field of rye and allow them to eat at will in the fall, but as soon as they have become accustomed to the new diet, they would eat the grain.

Then, when the teams could be used again, the teams could be used again.

When the teams could be used again,
