HANDSOME LACE SHAWL.

Among the new accessories for evening wear shown this season is a lace shawl of Irish crochet. There is nothing particularly protective about this pretty nuaunce, but it is decidedly ornamental in shape. It is like the old-fashioned cashmere shawl which our grandmothers wore, folded over with a point in the back. The front points are long and narrow and knotted at the bustline, as they often depend almost to the hem of the garment. Heavy crochet ornaments or tassels finish the points of these shawls. They come in various sizes and, consequently in various prices. Those of smaller size will also be used for head coverings for formal evening wear during the coming winter.

and friends were present to make merry the occasion and to wish Mr. and Mrs. Bott a continuation of happiness and prosperity. An elaborate supper was served.

Beless, Mrs. Hornung of Mantel, Mrs. Corfman of Provo and Mrs. Porter and Mrs. Barrows of Ogden.

The regular meeting of the Ladies' Literary club yesterday afternoon was of unusual interest. As it happened to fall on the wedding anniversary of Robert and Elizabeth Browning, 1846-1908, the program was entirely from Browning. "The Marriage of True Minds" being given by Mrs. Ewing. Readings from Mrs. Browning by Mrs. C. S. Richards; Robert Browning's songs, Mrs. Bessie S. Browning; readings from Robert Browning by Mrs. heart, "Epithalamium," Fred C. Graham.

Mrs. Sarah Platt Decker, president of the General Federation of Women's clubs, is an artist, suffragist. During the years that Mrs. Decker has been president of the General Federation of Women's clubs she has traveled all over the Union several times and has been called on again and again to explain that "really nice women" do vote. In one of the eastern seaboard states an elderly gentleman asked for information, and when Mrs. Decker said frankly that she not only always voted, but was a suffragist from principle and conviction, he could not conceal his grief. "You don't look it," he said earnestly. "I would never have thought you were a woman that voted. You look like such a comfortable woman." The next time a meeting in one of the poorer sections of Denver, a little old woman went up to Mrs. Decker and asked whether she might be permitted to "bring the family" to a meeting which had been announced for the Brown Palace hotel a week later. Mrs. Decker assured her that she could, thinking that there were probably a dozen grandchildren who would enjoy the lecture. Then it passed from her mind; but at the conclusion of the meeting at the Brown Palace, the same shabby little woman appeared, saying she would like to have Mrs. Decker meet her family. "Would you mind coming to the back of the hall?" she said. "I don't look it." Still with didn't like to come up front." Mrs. Decker made her way to the rear of the room. It was a woman's meeting, but the little old lady had brought her family of seven sons, none of them under six feet tall!

But Mrs. Decker was equal to the occasion, and asked for the absent member of the family. "Well, you see, dad sells his vote," replied one of the "children" awkwardly. "We're noways proud of dad, but there is all right and we always vote like he tells us to." From this it may be seen that a woman does not lose her "influence" by possessing the ballot.

In Women's World.

The Delineator gives the following as some results of one year of the child-rescue campaign: Three hundred and fifty children placed in good homes. Three thousand homes open to dependent children. Sixty societies and institutions co-operating in this child-placing movement, as opposed to institutionalism. Thousands of people interested, eager and willing to help the cause of the dependent child.

If there is anything that puzzles the ordinary domestic cook it is the problem of how to dispose of the left-over cakes, the muscles of both the neck and chin will feel very tender and sore, but that only proves that the muscles are getting much-needed exercise. Exercises such as extending while the arms, or bringing the elbows backward, trying to meet them in the middle of the back, and the use of dumbbells will greatly improve the appearance of the chin and neck. At the close of these exercises, the face should be rubbed with orange-flower skin food, should be rubbed well into the pores of the skin. Deep breathing will also work wonders in developing the neck and chin. Men who breathe deeply, invariably have beautiful necks and shoulders without the unsightly hollows that so frequently disfigure an otherwise beautiful neck.

For superior development, one of the best exercises is to clasp the hands in front, thumbs up, and the arms stretch front, thumbs up, and the arms stretched to the fullest. With the hands still clasped, raise them high above the head, inhaling and bringing them up until the shoulder blades pull. Repeat this five times, at first doing one exercise at a time, and then with the arms well above the head bring them down in a sweeping circle, one on each side, the thumbs pointing up, until the little fingers touch the sides of the legs as low as they can without bending the body. Both these exercises use directly the shoulder-blade muscles. If you go through these exercises as if you had your bitterest enemy at hand, and were taking it out on her, you are bound to secure a pair of beautiful shoulders within a short space of time.

Whether a man confides his business to his wife depends entirely upon the wife, says Mabel Potter Daggett, in the October Delineator. "There are women who are capable of sharing responsibilities and wise in discharging them. There are other women—dear doll women—who need to have all the difficulties of existence simplified at the little problems of life smoothed out and solved for them by another. When they are made that kind, they are only delightfully decorative bits in the scheme of life. So it sometimes happens that when a man has married a girl because of the sunshine glint in her hair, or the shadowy depths in her eyes, he has not always acquired the clear brain and the steady hand that may help at the helm of his business affairs, and he cannot now expect his wife to share very much the burden of his responsibilities. But there are other marriages more than beauty deep. Sometimes they are even those rare ideal unions that are deep. They happen semi-occasionally when love comes to a man and woman who are mentally and so mentally and every way equals. Then it is the woman's right to know and the man's right to share with her every pulse-beat of existence—even to the annoying details of his daily business perplexities. Always she can help him to solve them. Wherever there is a man's achievement there is always in the background, feminine inspiration and feminine sympathy that is the complement of his strength. Somewhere there must always be a woman to whom he can go and say, "I'm tired, dear," and when she has answered him all about it, she says, "I have never had this woman better be you? Inevitably, when she is not, she must be the other woman.

A CHARLOTTE CORDAY MODEL IN VELVET.

So attractive and becoming has the Charlotte Corday of the summer time proven that designers are showing many fall models of this type. It is developed in both silk and velvet and even satin is sometimes used. Some of these hats are larger than others, but that of middle size will doubtless prove to be the favorite for practical wear with smart tailored street suits. We see it in silk or velvet with trimmings of the same and wings or quills posed at the side of the crown to give it some height. That of the picture is of smoke gray panne velvet with a sash of taffeta in the same tone, and a pair of broad, blunt wings at the left side, these in a lighter shade.

Cut rather thick slices of cold boiled ham and lay them in a frying-pan. Cook on both sides until they begin to crisp at the edges and then put on a hot dish. Add to the fat in the pan four tablespoonsful of vinegar, a salt-spoonful of English mustard, a teaspoonful of white sugar and a few dashes of black pepper. Boil up covered, pour over the ham, let stand uncovered for a couple of minutes, and send to the table. There is no more savory method of cooking ham than this, and it wins almost universal approbation.

There are a number of easy and effective exercises that will serve to beautify the neck and chin. The first of these is to throw the head back as far as possible, thrusting out the under jaw at the same time, so that the whole chin will feel stretched and drawn out. With the chin kept at this tension turn the head first to the right and then to the left. These exercises, if persisted in, will give a grace and symmetry to the chin as well as do away with that bugbear—a double chin. After first using these exeroccasions. Possibly this interest in politics is largely increased by the absence of athletics and sports of any kind.

POLITICAL NURSERIES.

To a foreigner, and especially to an American, such a state of affairs seems most incomprehensible. That a number of young men should break off all their studies at the most important period of their educational life and engage in embittered theological and political conflicts, and still more that they should be aided and encouraged to do so by the press and politicians is difficult to be understood. But in continental Europe, and especially in German-speaking countries, there, the universities are a sort of political nursery where many important movements and their origin stand out clearly. In Vienna, for instance, the troubles generally are between the Germans and the Slavs, sometimes varied by internal rows among the Slavs themselves. Occasionally the Italians attack or are attacked by one of the other nationalities. At Innsbruck the conflict is between the Germans and the Czechs and the Germans, at Cracow it is the Germans and the Poles, at Lemberg the Poles and the Ruthenians, and so it goes.

SOURCE OF TROUBLE. It doesn't take much to start a row between such fiery factions, and once started it is difficult to tell where it will end. Hence the minister of education constantly has his hands full in maintaining anything like a general state of peace and order. One of the most fruitful sources of trouble is found in the old antagonism between the Clerical and Liberal students' societies, or "Burschenschafts." It is the custom of these clubs to wear colored caps and ribbons or sashes, with light dueling sabers on all festive occasions. But as the members of the Clerical transferring them and selling copies to their richer comrades. This is a tolerably certain method, as, with few exceptions, it is not necessary for students to attend lectures in person at all. Others give lessons to schoolboys or live as tutors in families. In short, they confine themselves to clerical occupations and do not act as waiters or spend their vacations in farm work. Living in the manner they do is not expensive. Two or three shillings will share a cabinet or hall bedroom at a pinch, and subsist on very little food. The "Mensa Academica," a students' institution, furnishes them with a substantial dinner, or fairly so, for about 12 cents, and coffee and bread and beer, with a little sausage occasionally, make up the rest of their diet. University fees are only nominal and in the case of poor men are often waived entirely. Then there are "Stipendium" or scholarships, of varying value ranging from $5 to $30 per annum. There is a large number of these, in fact, it is probable that 1,000 of the 7,000 students in the university of Vienna receive support from this source. There is nothing to prevent a poor youth in Austria from attending the university if he makes up his mind to do so, and it is astonishing how many of them take advantage of the situation. Whether it is altogether a good thing for a comparatively poor country to have such a large number of doctors of philosophy, of lawyers, of engineers, or what not, looking for profitable occupation is perhaps questionable. At any rate, the learned professions are greatly overdone, and very poor, in that regard.

FORTUNE PAID FOR NEWEST FRANS HALS.

Special Correspondence.

LONDON, Sept. 16.—When the announcement was recently made that the national gallery had secured an unknown example of Frans Hals, at the enormous and unprecedented price of about $125,000 the English public and a majority of the newspapers mildly protested. Now that several qualified critics have had an opportunity of examining the picture, a better feeling prevails and the public are now wondering if, after all, the director and trustees of the national gallery have not stolen a march on the other great galleries of the world in securing one of the few great examples of the Dutch master to be had for love or money.

One of the most popular of Hals' pictures, "The Laughing Cavalier," is of course in the hands of the British nation and hangs in the Wallace collection. For that, too, an unprecedented price was paid. Indeed it was the purchase of that picture by Lord Hertford at an auction sale in Paris for $10,000 that started the rise in Hals. Previous to that time $250 was the highest that had ever been paid, in England at any rate, for a picture by the Saarlens painter, and the dealers and collectors present at the Paris auction sale were almost howled off their feet when the English peer opened the bidding with his $10,000 offer. There was no opposition and the picture was immediately knocked down to the open-handed marquis. Since then the record has been frequently broken and at the Secretan sale in Paris more than $22,000 was bid for the portrait of Pieter van der Broeck, d'Anvers.

These big prices were for single portraits while the present picture which the British nation has just acquired contains less than half the figures. It is 8 feet 4 inches in width by 4 feet 11 inches in height. The history of the now famous picture is obscure. Its owner, up to a few weeks ago, was Lord Pembroke, an Irish nobleman, who little suspected its real value. A cleaner called in to renovate his collection and recognized it as a really fine painting with the national gallery and after delicate negotiations the deal was closed. Curiously enough, it is believed in some quarters that investigations will show that it is really the painting known as the "Portrait Group of Van Goyen, the Painter, and his Family," which was sold in a London saleroom in 1832 for the absurdly small sum of $250.
