FOREIGHT OF HEAVEN.

Such is a home in which even the best achieve their happiness.

I was talking one day with a lady about her home, and she said, "If there is a heaven up north it is in its homes." It was a home from which selfishness had been expelled and love had come in to take its place.

Type imperfectly shadow the things they are intended to represent, but we are still more likely to find them than we are to increase if Christians would strive to make their homes like types of the better homes hereafter, of which it is said there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defiles.

There is more force in a home made humble by humility than in a home that is swelling power in a form that is made attractive by a pure and happy family life. A Christian father once said to a minister, "The moral measure of any man's soul is their cheerful, pure attitude home life."

The kind homes may be made the center of the highest happiness. In a recent article in a western paper the writer says: "Over a coffin the other day I heard a man say to the sleeper, 'In poverty and grief I never failed to have a kind and hopeful word for me.'" Such a tribute as that opens up to us a picture of a home that had a touch of heaven in all its surroundings.

We often say that it will be one highest happiness in heaven to be with Jesus.
We may not have a foretaste of that happiness by having Jesus with us in our homes here. It is written of God's people: "He who dwelt among us over the last, though divine, did not feel 'all the children of Israel had light in their dwellings.' May not the heartily father's children always have light in all their dwellings?"

A short time ago I was present at the placing of a window in a chapel as a memorial to a deceased friend. A good work among his fellow men. The window is rich in coloring and beautiful in design, looking out on a striking and appropriate landscape. The rays of the afternoon sun lighted it up radiantly, filling the room with brightness, even as the light of the world in his life had reflected brightness into the lives of those whom he loved. How happy every home would be if this true light shone through the lives of all who make up the household.

We speak and sing of heroes as a home. A letter from a friend, giving us a picture of a home where there is a good woman, contains this paragraph:
"Mother has just passed hence." What a happy reunion that will be when her loved ones go up to meet her in the Father's home. There is something beautiful in the Christian love that unites a family together. There is something beautiful in the love of a child that is a manifestation of his love to his children. The world will be enduring. The true home-hold of faith will be the household of the saved. Those who have Christ with them in their homes will have their homes with him forever. "He that abides in the Son the same shall dwell ever."

I have just read a notice of the death of a good man, who, during a long life, had been loved in the community where he lived, and had filled many places of honor and trust in which it was said of him:
"He was born to be useful in his neighborhood." He died leaving nothing but a desire to inherit with family members.

Who can fully estimate the influence of such a family life upon the children and servants and strangers within the gate?

On the quiet, smiling prairie land in the West, where the Indians still multitudes of them have reported to see all their children brought into the kingdom in answer to their prayers. It may be that many who have died without the sight will be made glad at the great day by seeing their children gather round around the throne, as an audience gather round the king.
