EVENING NEWS,

Pec. 26, 1883. Wednesday,

On the evening of the 7th of Dec-ember, in that year, there was a term of life must seek to attain non-powed into a patient of the rule—for which is better than remedies the must seek to attain non-powed into a patient of the part of the patient of the patie lead. Miss Barker, however, had a lingular faith that he would come back some day. She kept her vow as to living a secluded life, and few people ever saw her after the night she had quarreled with her lover. On Friday evening, the 7th inst., a stranger knocked at the door of old Mr. Barker's house and asked to see Miss Barker. He was a large, finelooking man about forty years of age. He was admitted, and when Miss Barker appeared he held out his hand and said: "Mary Barker, didn't I tell you that you wouldn't see me again in twenty years?"

It was William Craig. He had returned to his parent's home in the afternoon. Both his father and other were still living. The secret of his arrival was kept, and when he appeared in so dramatic a manner in the presence of his old sweet-heart she fainted in his arms.

Craig's story of his disappearance and long absence was that he had gone straight to Philadelphia after leaving home, and there enlisted in the army under an assumed name. He served until the end of the war and was mustered out at Philadel. phia. He longed very much to return home, but he permitted his determination to remain away 20 years to control him, and he went directly to Nebraska. There he farming, remaining there until the farming, remaining there until the at Lige's Barber Shop, next to Cal 20 years were up. He resolved to der's new building. took up a tract of land and went his old sweetheart, if she was still silve and unmarried, at as near the hour of his leaving her as it was possible to do. He came back with in ample fortune, and found matters much as he had left them. The wedding that did not come off twenty years ago, will be cele-brated before New Years'.

A LAWYER'S PRIVILEGES.

"Lawyers," says a suffering citizen, "are a wonderfully privileged class. Put yourself on the witness stand, for example. You are an average citizen. You try to pay your obligations, You attend to business. You are as honest as your fellows. You take a glass of over now and then, and you know a pretty woman when you see her and you wouldn't be a decent fellow f you didn't. But the minute you et on the witness stand, wi ha modern lawyer in front of you, you begin to think that you are the big-gest scoundrel in the world. The lawyer will make you out a thief, a liar, a drunkard, a libertine, an athelat, and everything else that's bad. He may ask you if you ever served a term in the penitentiary. O. course, at this the opposing coursel of jects, and then the counseleays, 'well, I don't press that question,' and so you, the Tor witness, are left, half the audience thinking that you have been in the penitentlary. If you are a new comer to the place, with only a year or two of residence, you are sure to be disgraced. If you appeal to the judge, he will teil you that you are not obliged to criminate yourself, etc. A cowardly lawyer may abuse and browbeat a brave man on the witness stand, and there is no redeess for the witness If he avenges wrong out ide the court-house, and knicks his per secutor down, the brave man is sent to jail, for the members of the bar stand together like a band of band-its. It is not alone in the courts that its. It is not alone in the course that inwyers have a license that makes them a privileged diss. There is scarcely anything that a lawyer can't do under cover of his diploma. He can arrange conspiracy, parjury, oribery, and a desenother crimes, for which he cannot be punished, tecanse he is a lawyer—counsel. He can take a fee for anything. If it is crooked, he is all right, because he is 'bounsel'. If a journalist should do the same thing, he would be sant to the penitentiary."

THE DONKEY'S PROTECTOR A donkey was grazing in a field near New York, a short time since, when a savage boar pig found his way into the place, and drove the inoffensive animal into a corner, and commenced running at him and biting pieces out of his legs, which made the poor bute cry out with pain. In the next field a pony was torned out belonging to some coal turned out belonging to some coal merchants—an animal remarkable for agility and muscle.

Hearing something amiss, Jenny was curious to know what was going on, and after a survey, and fully understanding that her neighbor the donkey needed help, the pony was seen to clear the stone wall at a bound, and immediately announced her presence to the bristly intruder by vigorously using a good pair of the clear at Jenny, thinking the donkey's enemy might return again to annoy him, decided to see him out of the field, and followed him up applying a persuader when the thought becomotion was not satisfactory. After the intrading pig had been sammarily ejected, Jenny took up her quarters with the dankey, and cliffe of tences or sinner walls, could not be kept away. The poor donkey's wounds were dressed and seen to, and it is now all right.

THE CHEAPEST THING ON EARTH.

When you buy a newspaper, whether you pay a cent, two cents, five cents of the cents for it, you get more for your money than you do shen buying anything else in the world. This aroused the spirit of the young lady, and she replied that she would dance with him or anyone else she chose, and as many times as term of life must seek to attain continue. This aroused the spirit of the young lady, and she replied that she would dence with him or anyone else she chose, and as many times as she liked. Craig then informed her that she might do so, but that she wouldn't see him again for twenty years. To this she taintingly replied that "he couldn't stay, away from her twenty hours if he tried ever so hard."

Craig went home, and the next day he was missing. He lived with his parents, who were unable to find any trace of him. Miss Barker of wowed she never would go into or receive company again notil he is a company again and he is a company again not the first he turned.

As years passed by and no traces of the missing son were received, his parents came to look, upon him as dead. Miss Parks.
