

TELEGRAPHIC. BLIXT'S TESTIMONY

In the Trial of Harry Hayward for the Murder of Miss Ging.

DETAILS OF THE TRAGEDY.

SACRAMENTO. Cross-Examination fails to shake the original story of the witness.

MICHAELSON, Feb. 6.—In the trial of Harry Hayward for the murder of Miss Ging, Blixit said how he accused wanted him to go somewhere and get a horse home. And he said he would drive out somewhere with Miss Ging, would sleep some, money out of the囊, and get her to go after it. Then he would strike up the road with the "P.T." and have her there and start the horse running away. He failed to make a list of all the things he had in his pocket when he went so that he should not say anything while away that would turn up against him at witness. That was the plan, and when he was asked if he ever heard of people getting killed in this way, he said, "We used to get in the car with her and strike out on the road and then pull up on the door so that when the police came it would not be found."

At this there was a low murmur of horror that ran through the audience, which was checked by the Deputy's gavel. "I said I would not do that," went on Blixit. "Hayward told me this every time Miss Ging came into his room and put her arms around me. She must be wanted in such a knife and gun," said Blixit, with an expressive gesture, showing how Harry waited at the door. "I said to him, 'Harry, you can't make money some other way? This is the easiest thing I ever heard.' He said, 'You're a coward.' You're a coward, is hurting. If I had not seen a girl, I would not have been here this evening. We were down with her in the inner room and she was talking. The next morning, that was Monday, about 11 o'clock, we handed her watch, a box of cartridges and a roll of money, and I said, 'This is enough to buy a team of horses that would not be found.' The watch was gold and broad, there was $50 in money there. I put it in the attic and when I told him where I had placed it, he said, 'It's not safe to have it there. I'll take the first piece of jewelry first. He said to put it in a hollow tree in the woods. He said the money was not all good, but that some of it was good money. He said there was going to be a funeral there before him, no matter what he did. He said, 'I don't care who's brought him and I'll bury and I'll have to sit up all night with the corpse and after the funeral has had his examination, then I'll go to the coroner's office and say, "I want to have $500 to carry out my wife in the East. He would give $10,000 out of this and he would have to make $5,000 in some other way.'

"Late that evening he came in with a pistol, a revolver, a box of cartridges and a bottle of whisky. I said I didn't want any. "You're a fool," he said, "this isn't common whisky." Then I took it and drank half of it. Then he said, 'You've got to die tonight and I've got to kill you.' He said, 'Harry, you can't get any other way to make money than to kill this poor little girl.' He said, 'I've nothing to kill people. I've killed two other people.' He said one was a Chinaman, and the other was a Negro. He said he had wounded a third. I said I could not help him do it. He said I've got to or he would kill me. I did not pay any attention to that and then he said, 'Kill my wife and I'll kill yours, whatever you do, don't hurt me. You can do what you like with me, but don't kill my wife.'

At the conclusion of this the witness house down utterly and suddenly like a child. At last, resuming his narrative, Blixit said:

"Finally I said to him that I would do as he liked, but he must not hurt my wife. He wanted me to sign a receipt for a revolver, but I would not. He gave me six cartridges and a pistol and said, 'I'll go with it and when we all come I'll be to change the cartridges. Then he told me to go out Michaelson's wagon to Keweenaw and walk off him. When he came I saw him coming and I hit him. Then he stopped the carriage and I said, 'I want to get him off and drive away.' I got him off and said to him, 'Keep your revolver.' Then he said to Miss Ging, 'This man is in the gang?' Then we drove out Michaelson's wagon, and I said to him, 'Wait until we get to town.' After which we sat in the carriage while he was saying green peas. I told him I did not know, and he asked me what I had done there by my son. I said he was a revolver. Then he said, 'That's right.' Then he took out all the cartridges. I kept looking out at the window. A light was right in my head all the time, I thought. I would get out and then I thought of my wife and stayed in the carriage. I tried ten times to do it and I nearly fainted in my heart. Finally I tried to get out again and I almost. Then there was no need back like this. I went up about fifty or sixty yards further and then I thought it'd have to get out. I moved up to the window, then I went out and took another look and then I returned to the carriage.

At the Michaelson review Blixit was again put on the stand and he did not say any part of the story he had told, but he did say the same things he had in his pocket when he went so that he should not say anything while away that would turn up against him at witness. That was the plan, and when he was asked if he ever heard of people getting killed in this way, he said, "We used to get in the car with her and strike out on the road and then pull up on the door so that when the police came it would not be found."

"A day or two after the murder, Harry came down state and I asked him if he got out. He said he had been in the service, but that he wouldn't give any details.

"Mr. Brown then began a long and searching cross-examination. He first drew out that Blixit had told no story at least one person, including the city attorney, the sheriff, the jailor, the police, his own attorney, his wife, his children, the coroner, the sheriff, the county attorney, the state attorney, the prosecutorial which he was suspended before the election was drawn from him. But this lawyer tried to shake his original story, he repeated it without embellishment, continually. Finally he got him to admit that he was a happy man. He knew he was forgiven and had a home with God in heaven. He was telling the truth now, although he had lied in his first confession.

"What did those men who were with you do?" repeated Blixit to surprise.

"They were men," said Blixit.

"There were not any men with me," Blixit said. "The men in the carriage which he had on the same night, taking the only ones he had. Lewis at once offered them his evidence.

The jury examined them and found that they were the same as those of blood. Lewis asked that Blixit's mouth remain in the courtroom.

GENERAL SMITH GIVES AN IDEA AS TO THE MANAGEMENT OF A BALLOON.

CARLISLE, Feb. 5.—Colonel William Smith, the expert engineer, has given several hints in regard to the management of balloons for war purposes, suggesting the use of a new kind of war balloon which Uncle Sam proposes to have built for army purposes at Fort Logan, Colo., General Smith, after pointing out that this is the first time in history that the United States has been compelled to build an airship, said, "I have never seen a more difficult task than this, but I believe the government will manage to accomplish it."

The speaker opened the returns from the countries in alphabetical order, handed them consecutively to the balloons who examined them, and the balloons by their respective names reported the results of each nation's organization, etc. The returns from sixty-two countries were thus opened and after the examination of each nation's task, it was decided that they were best suited to the government by the Governor, Turkey or Mr. Lincoln, who being the best, stated that the balloons did not believe the returns were true.

After all the returns are opened, the balloons will be made up and an investigation committee appointed.

TARNERS' ALLIANCE.

PENTON AGAINST THE PROPOSED LEAGUE OF RAILROADS.

BALTIMORE, N. C., Feb. 5.—The executive council of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union met in session yesterday, but today, United States Senator Marion Butler, Senator Joseph H. Smith, and the council to order and preside Major Langer, of this city, who devolved the chairmanship of Baltimore. President M. L. Barnes, of the North Carolina state bank, welcomed the council to the city, and the members of the delegation from twenty-six states. At the evening meeting of the council the following resolutions on the currency question were adopted:

"Resolved, That it is currently reported that a national currency has been determined on by the President of the United States; and

"Whereas, the executive, existing statutes law, and authorities exist, it is deemed necessary to present emergency legislation to Congress."

"Resolved, That the power is now possessed in the general government to issue and coin a national currency and by the plain terms of existing laws,

"Resolved, That the national currency of the Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union in regular annual session assembled, enter our appeals and most earnest protest against such baseless."

"Resolved, That the executive, the administration, and the people of the country be requested to honor and assist the movement, and as far as possible to bring about a national currency."

"Resolved, That if this does not end the present emergency, the government be requested to have immediate action for a legal tender treasury note."

HISTORICAL NOTES ON THE ARMENIAN.

LAWRENCE, Feb. 5.—In the House of Commons, Mr. Blixit said the government was wise to act in the Armenian massacre with the cardinal principles of France, Russia and Italy. Events would show that these powers were well to do in the inquiry of the Turkish Government, and to sustain the truth. In the inquiry into the Armenian massacres, the House of Commons would not possibly do to leave the Armenian Christians to their present miseries or they would be subject to reprisals."

Blixit denied the complaint of Salisbury that the House of Lords was not referred to in the Queen's speech. Blixit adhered to what he had already said that the resolutions between the turk and the Greeks gave a grave danger to the future of the country, and that in the opinion of the government, the constitutional method of dealing with the situation was by a resolution which it was not necessary nor expedient to introduce immediately, as it was necessary to follow up the decision of Parliament for which he, the speaker, did not see any immediate necessity.

After the Duke of Arundel had denied that the measures mentioned in the Queen's speech were not intended to pass the House adopted the motion in reply to the speech.
