POEMS EVERYBODY SHOULD KNOW.

NIGHT.

A well known English critic wrote of the poetry of Percy Bysshe Shelley: "Many of his contemporaries and nearly all the poetical writers of any eminence since his time bear visible traces of how much they imbued themselves with Shelley's poetry. I will mention as instances of this Keats, Browning and Tennyson. No one, indeed, who is unacquainted with Shelley can be aware of the full richness and melody of our language."

*Swiftly walk over the western wave,
Spirit of Night!
Out of the misty eastern cave,
Where, all the long and lone daylight,
Thou wovest dreams of joy and fear,
Which make these terrible and dear—
Swift by thy flight!*

*Wrap thy form in a mantle gray,
Star-inwrought!
Blind with thine hair the eyes of Day,
Kiss her until she be wearied out;
Then wander o'er city and sea and land,
Touching all with thine opiate wand—
Come, long-sought!*

*When I arose and saw the dawn,
I sighed for thee:
When light rode high, and the dew was gone,
And noon lay heavy on flower and tree,
And the weary Day turned to her rest,
Lingered like an unloved guest.
I sighed for thee!*

*Thy brother Death came, and cried,
"Wouldst thou me?"
Thy sweet child Sleep, the flamy-eyed,
Murmured like a noon-tide bee,
"Shall I nestle near thy side?
Wouldst thou me?" And I replied,
"No! not thee!"*

*Death will come when thou art dead,
Soon, soon—
Sleep will come when thou art fled:
Of neither would I ask the boon
I ask of thee, belov-ed Night,
Swift be thine approaching flight.
Come soon, soon!*

By Percy Bysshe Shelley.

NOTES.

After a silence of two years, Dr. James M. Ludlow, author of "The Captain of the Janissaries," is coming forward with a new book that promises to be a success. It is a story of the tall, swarthy King and America. This second novel of the thirteen-year-old author, entitled "The Hawk," and deals with the tremendous plot that diverted a whole crusade to the capture of the Constantine slopes.

A girl now living in New York, who went to the big city absolutely without training, experience or friends, and with only a few dollars, has written down the facts of her first few months' fight against starvation. The book, which will be published soon under the title of "The Long Day" by the Century Company, promises to be one of the world's interesting and important books of the fall.

Already the titles of new novels to be expected in the fall are being announced. William Le Queux will deal in "Behind the Throne" with intrigues upon the game and the goings-on behind during the latter years of King Edward's reign. Miss Agnes G. Warden's "The Hawk" is by no means at a beginning. The British organization has already begun the story of the London League, which had headquarters in Piccadilly, opposite St. James Park. Berlin is just about to take up the thread in "The Ambassador," and the new novel "Lyceum" seems to be expected at the same time.

American women have been wont to think that every thing original along the line of clubs emanated from this country, but England is leading the van in this organization, quite out of the madding crowd.

The ruling spirit of the scheme is Mrs. Adeline Johnson, the sculptress, who is well known here and abroad. A London banker named Smiley launches it financially. His daughter, Miss Smiley, originated the London club.

Briefly the new club will include the many privileges which the recent movement in women's clubs has made as a necessity. It will be the focal home of any out-door members, and will, in fact, cater especially to the traveling clientele. As it is intended to embrace all the arts and literature, it will offer facilities for disposal of work in those various lines, and will give opportunity for the meeting of women who have found distinction in different careers.

A good story of a recent conversation between Mr. Howells and Mark Twain is going the rounds. Mark Twain was relating some of his experiences before he became famous. My mother often quotes me some drifts, he observed, "But I never knew whether it was wiser to spend my last nickel for a cigar to smoke or for an apple to devour." "I am astound'd!" returned Mr. Howells, "that a person of so little decision should meet with so much worldly success." Mark Twain added dryly, "Indeed, about spending money," he remarked, "is worthy of cultivation. When I couldn't decide what to buy with my last nickel I kept it, and so became rich!"

The revival of interest in Paul Jones which has followed upon the publication of his biography in Paris, is shown by the fact that Bush's "Paul Jones," which has been accepted as the standard life of this founder of the American navy, has gone into its eighth edition.

George Care Eggleston is passing the summer in Italy among the pines of the Ester of Lake George, near the house and stone library formerly occupied by his brother, the late Edward Eggleston. It is understood that Mr. Eggleston is completing the second volume of his "Little History of Colonial Life," which will deal with the life, manners and customs of the eighteenth century.

F. Marion Crawford has fled on board his yacht, the Orla, to escape the tourists who every summer besiege his Corinto villa, and has gone south long the Calabrian coast. The latest advices have it that he has sold himself to a compact rate at the Casaleto di San Nicola, one of the watch towers erected by Charles V against Saracen invasion. This probably means that we shall have a new romantic novel for the Christmas holidays, for "Fate" Margaret will scarcely have completed its serial run yet. Mr. Crawford also has a book on Venice for the autumn, much after the style of "Ave Roma Immortalis."

Brentano's have acquired by purchase the plates and the entire stock of the books formerly published by the George Thaw company. Among these are many choice titles, and in most cases the books are exquisitely printed and in limited editions, including "Dante's Inferno," "A Pilgrim's Progress," "Lives" and "The Golden Age of Antiquity." The series also includes a beautiful edition on vellum of Helbien's "Dance of Death," a complete reprint edition from woodcuts of the famous series by the great artist.

Hermann Lingg, whose death in his eighty-sixth year is announced from Munich, is almost the last of the celebrated band of poets who gathered at Munich in the early sixties, and who included Goethe, Schiller and Hebbel among their number. He was comparatively unsuccessful as a medical man, but succeeded as a military surgeon in the Bavarian service, but ill-health obliged him to resign in 1841. King Maximilian granted him a pension and he was therefore able to devote himself to literature, at which he was especially successful as a writer of lyrics and ballads. His life was distinctly original, though his name had little chance of permanent pre-eminence. His dramatic efforts were failures, but many of his stories were popular.

Readers of Wordsworth will be interested to hear that the Gowkarrow estate lies on the north side of Chesafield, associated with Alce's Force and Lydford Force. It inspired Wordsworth to write "Alce's Force Valley," where he describes "the soft eye-music of slow-waving boughs" caused by the breeze entering the grot, and it is still gay with daffodils in March, as it was when Miss Wordsworth, the post and his wife saw a host of them.

Mrs. Mary E. Wilkins Freeman, Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, Miss Jeanette Glider, Mrs. Ruth McHenry, Miss Joannette Glider, Mrs. Ruth McHenry, Mrs. D. Gill, dean of Bernard, Mrs. Dimity T. S. Denton, Miss Hazard of Wellesley and other prominent women of this country are said to be actively interested in a club which originated in London, and which it is intended will have a chapter in one of the large cities of Europe and America. This second "Womankind" is by no means at a beginning. The British organization has already begun the story of the London League, which had headquarters in Piccadilly, opposite St. James Park. Berlin is just about to take up the thread in "The Ambassador," and the new novel "Lyceum" seems to be expected at the same time.
