THE CHARIOTS OF ISRAEL.

(From Old Sayings.)

BY W. W. PHELPS.

Tune—"Hymns of Glen."

The white horse's archer is darting his arrows;
The red horse's captain ends "peace" with a sword;
The black horse's rider cries famine and sorrows;
The pale horse and Death, shouting—"Heli come aboard!"

CHORUS:

Yet as truth waxes louder, the gentiles grow prouder,
Their "times are fulfilling," alas! sure enough,
Shout fathers, and mothers, and sisters, and brothers,
"The chariots of Israel and horsemen thereof."

The vengeance of God like a whirlwind is coming,
To chasten the world by continual strokes;
His chariot wheels on the mountains are humming;
His anger is kindled, his jealousy smokes.

When violence and bloodshed had made the earth streaked,
Jehovah just swept them away with a flood;
And now with a judgment he'll burn up the wicked,—
The sun shall be darkened, the moon turned to blood.

The awful hereafter, like forests round water,
Exhibits its shade on the current of time;
The banquet of hell calls a world to the slaughter,
To cope with the Savior in glory sublime.

The hand on the wall, as it did to Belshazzar,
Hath wrote MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN, to all;
They're pounding the "image" of Nebuchadnezzar,
And Babylon, the great, with its splendor, must fall.

"That stone" for the image, as evil increases,
Though small, like a mite, yet will grow with good men,
And fall on the kingdoms and break them to pieces,
And Adam will come and bring Zion again.

The summer is nigh, and the fig trees are budding;
"The last days have come with their terrors and tears;"
The vail of the earth, like a scroll, of a sudden,
Will roll up; Hosanna! then Jesus appears.

DISCOURSE

By ERASTUS, SNOW, Tabernacle, Jan. 5, 1860

[REPORTED BY G. D. WATT.]

I have lately held certain conversations which have caused a train of reflection in my mind this morning, and a few passages of scripture to float across my mind, which, unless I should be led in another train of thought, I will give to my brethren and sisters; but I desire not my own will, but the will of my Father who is in heaven. That which is meet to me might not be to a mixed multitude of people. God knoweth best that which is suitable unto our circumstances.

If we would do the most good, we must feel the most passive in the hands of our Heavenly Father. We must be like a musical instrument in the hands of skillful performer. Shall the instrument say to him that performs upon it, why do you play thus? Or shall the law say to him that speaketh it, why dost thou use me thus?

True, every individual intelligence is possessed of a will which is a propelling power within himself. Good and evil is placed before us, and we have to choose between them. Light and darkness exist, and if we are not influenced by the one power we shall be by the other. When we entered into the fullness of the gospel—into a sacred and holy covenant with God—we virtually agreed to surrender our will to him, we agreed to place ourselves under his direction, guidance, dictation and council, that our will should be merged in his. Hence we are in duty bound, and it is for our best interest to strive to attain to that state of mind and feeling that we shall have no will of our own independent of the will of our Father in heaven; and say in all things, "Father not mine, but thy will be done." Let me speak therefore not according to any selfishness that is in me, not to speak simply my own feelings, but that the mind of Christ may be in me, that I may speak as he would were he in my place this morning, and act as he would if he were in my circumstances; nor have we the promise of our Father that he will dictate in us unless we arrive at this state of feeling.

If our spirits are inclined to be stiff and refractory, and we desire continually the gratification of our own will, to the extent that this feeling prevails in us, the Spirit of the Lord is held at a distance from us, or, in other words, the Father withholds his Spirit from us in proportion as we desire the gratification of our own will. We interpose a barrier between us and our Father that he cannot consistently with himself move upon us so as to control our actions. He may set bounds around us and hedge us in round about that beyond a certain point our will cannot be gratified, when he cannot influence our wills in any other way, by bringing a combination of circumstances to bear upon us to circumscribe us, he may eventually bring our wills into subjection. Like we would corral a wild horse, or one that has grown cunning and is unwilling to be caught and bridled, and keeps out of the way of his pursuers, they are under the necessity of taking him by guile, by alluring him into some large field or corral, to gradually hem him in until he is brought into a small compass, where, before he is aware of it, he finds himself taken. Our Father operates in a similar way.

I might say also, that our adversary profits by a similar example, understanding the same policy to a degree. When he would involve us in his snares, he is careful to do it in a way we shall not know it until our feet are in. This arises from our limited capacity, from our weakness, and the weaker power becomes a prey to the greater.

Our Father in heaven is laboring for our exaltation, his work forever and ever is doing good; good is the part he has chosen, evil he escheweth; he seeks to unite and concentrate the faith and feelings of intelligent beings, to improve them, to teach them the benefits of doing good and the consequences resulting from doing evil, that the one principle tendeth to dissolution, and to eternal death and disorganization, while the other principle tendeth to life, to perpetuate the organization which has already been affected, and bring it to the highest state of perfection, or in other words to secure to intelligent beings the boon they most earnestly desire, namely, the continuation of lives.

What desire has been planted in the human breast that is equal to the desire of life? What will a man not give in exchange for his life? To use the words of the savior—"For what is a man profited, if he should gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" What man under the sentence of death for a breach of law that would not give all he possessed of earthly substance to atone, if his life could only be spared? How few there are that would not be willing to give the whole world, if they possessed it, for their lives.

Why is this universal desire planted in the human breast to live? It is a law ordained in nature for good. We may call it instinct, or by what name we please, it is a universal law in all intelligent beings to seek to retain the organization they possess. Hence when sickness assails us, an enemy appears in deadly array with a show to lay us low in death, every faculty of the soul is aroused to repel it, and we use all the means in our power to stay the progress of disease.

The scriptures inform us that the greatest gift of God is eternal life. Is this a gift of God in deed and in truth? Yes, I understand it to be to all intents and purposes the gift of God. Yet eternal life is not attained without compliance on our part with those principles that lead to the attainment of it. I will illustrate this by what we see daily in our natural life. We understand by what we learn daily that there are certain things that tend to destroy this tabernacle; and there are other things which, if we deserve, have a tendency to prolong the organization of this tabernacle, and our temporal existence.

For example, we have learned by numerous observations and examples that if an individual cast himself into the sea without having any means of floating, he will sink in the water and under it, and he cannot live. A certain thing is necessary to his existence, which is the pure, wholesome air inhaled into the lungs. Anything that cuts us off from this supply, terminates our earthly existence; the machinery of this tabernacle cannot be kept in motion without it. We have also learned that excessive heat, or excessive cold will stop this machinery of life. There are various other causes which stop the machinery of life in our mortal tabernacles. If we would prolong our organization for any certain number of years, we must carefully guard against those evils that endanger our tabernacles, excesses of every kind have a tendency to weaken and ultimately to destroy the tabernacle of man. An excessive appetite if encouraged with rich viands, and this persisted in, will make the possessor a glutton, and shorten his mortal career.

If a person having a strong desire for stimulents, such as spirituous liquors, tea, coffee, tobacco, opium, etc., that stimulate the nervous system to excess, and continues to gratify this appetite, will soon destroy the elasticity of his nervous system and become like a bone that is often bent almost to breaking. If a boy be kept strung up to its utmost tension it loses its power and strength until it is of little or no use.

So in nature; the more any powerful stimulent is made use of in the human system the sooner the human machinery will be worn out. It follows then, if we will secure life, and preserve the organization of this tabernacle, we must observe the laws of life, we must abstain from intemperance of every description. We must neither indulge in excessive eating, excessive drinking, or in excessive working, whereby to over tax our physical energies, or our nervous system. Perhaps no kind of labor will so rapidly weaken the power of life within us, or strength of these tabernacles like excessive mental labor, because it has a more direct influence upon the nervous system. The nervous system seems to be a sort of connecting link between our spirit and our tabernacles. Yet a proper amount of labor, physical and mental, becomes necessary to the proper development of the faculties of both body and soul.

The child that has never faith to attempt to walk, as a matter of course, will never learn to walk. When he first begins to exercise his feet and legs to walk, they are weak and scarcely capable of supporting his little frame; but the more he exercises them the more he receives strength. And so with every other portion of the tabernacle. The same may be said of all mental gifts and endowments. The mind that is naturally stupid, dull, and inactive, and no outward circumstances are brought to bear upon it, to impel it to exercise; that mind remains comparatively undeveloped, that spirit does not improve, nor increase in strength and capacity.

The more the mental faculties are brought into exercise, if it is not immoderate exercise, the more these faculties receive strength, and the greater powers of research are developed in that spirit; and where shall the end thereof be?

There is no end to its increase of knowledge and truth, unless we turn round and go the other way; in other words, unless we persistently pursue the path of death, and violate every law, both physical and mental, until we become dissolved.

If we cease temperate habits and give ourselves up to the gratification of our lusts and appetites, and pursue this course from year to year, we shall find ourselves steadily going down to the chambers of death, and no power can hinder it; it is a fixed law of our physical existence. Can the Lord change it? I will not stop to inquire whether he can or not. I will say, however, I never heard of his doing it on any other condition than that individual repenting of his evil course. When he does this, and observes the laws of life and health, God will add his blessing to his efforts, and he will begin to ascend the hill again, and he may regain in some measure that which he has lost. But as long as he continues that course of evil, no power can redeem him.

What I say therefore in regard to the mortal body is equally applicable to the eternal life of the soul.

There is no such principle as saving a man in his sins, neither physically nor spiritually. Our Savior has never offered himself as an atonement for mankind to redeem and save them in their sins. I regard this as an utter impossibility.

Some of my friends who may have been reared up in the old straight-jacket school of modern theology, may be startled with the idea of anything being impossible with God. But I conceive it to be a fixed axiom that two and two make four, whether the addition is made by man or God.

It is just as impossible for God to add two and two together and make ten of it as it is for me or you. Mathematical truths are as true with God and angels as they are with man. I understand that what has exalted to life and salvation our Father in heaven, and all the Gods of eternity will also exalt us—their children. And what causes Lucifer and his followers to descend to the regions of death and perdition will also lead us in the same direction; and no atonement of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ can alter that eternal law any more than he can make two and two to mean sixteen.

One may ask wherein the atonement of Jesus Christ has affected us. Through his atonement is granted unto us repentance and remission of sins. He came from the Father to sojourn in the flesh among men, to take upon him the infirmities of the flesh, and the weaknesses of human nature, subjecting himself to the contradiction of sinners, exposing himself to all the physical ills that prey upon the human system, and to all the powers of darkness that prey upon the intellectual faculties of man, exposing himself to the temptations of the hosts of hell. He had to combat all these contending powers, to resist satan and all his armies, and to resist every other evil flesh is heir to, and set forth an example of purity and perfection to the human family. In the language of sacred writ—"For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending His own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin condemned sin in the flesh."

Thus he demonstrated to human beings it is possible for them to live without sin, that our God might be just in condemning sin in every form and in every place, and in every being. So that in truth he might say, as he says in the preface of the Book of Doc. & Coven. that he cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance. We can understand also why he is a merciful and forgiving spirit, exercising a fatherly tenderness over us, to pardon our follies and weaknesses, yet he cannot justify them in the least degree.

Should we seek to become like him, to be actuated by the same principle, striving to ascend to the same glory? We should: we should imitate His example. And while we exercise the same unbounded mercy and compassion over the weakness of our fellows, yet in no case whatever should we look upon sin with the least degree of allowance or in any manner justify it. However much may be said in palliation of the faults of mankind, nothing can be said in justification of them. The Scriptures say that our Savior was tempted in all things like we are, yet without sin. And in order that he might be tempted in all things like we are, he was born of a woman as we were, possessing like passions with ourselves, and was exposed to the same kind of temptations to which we are exposed in life. Yet he withstood them all.

The scriptures say he tasted death for every man. Did he taste death for every man with a view that every man should be saved from death? No. If so, it would destroy the principle I have been speaking of, and would save the children of men in their sins. But while death had passed upon all mankind because of sin, there was no power that could avert it; yet by offering himself an offering for sin, he opened a way for mankind to be raised again from the dead, and for ever afterwards be set free from its power.

His death has also opened up a door of repentance unto us, giving unto us a hope of redemption through his blood. Has it given us a hope of salvation in our sins? Not to me. I hope not to be able to eat fire with impunity and still prolong my days. I have no such promise that I can have melted lead running down my throat instead of wholesome diet, and expect it is going to be converted into life-giving food in my system. I have no better grounds to hope that I shall, by the death of Christ, be saved from the consequences of persisting in a wicked course of life.

The consequences of our transgressions must fall upon us. Yet Christ has placed before us the principle of faith, hope and charity. If we will exercise faith in him, we may have hope of redemption through his blood on condition that we repent of our sins, and turn about and pursue the path of life. We and our fathers before us have so far partaken of the elements of death that we cannot save our mortal tabernacles from that change that awaits them.

This promise we have, that when the time comes that is written of in the scripture, that satan shall be bound, and shall cease to exercise his power and dominion over the hearts of the children of God for the space of a thousand years; the children that shall grow up unto the Lord shall not taste of death; that is, "they shall not sleep in the earth; but they shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and they shall be caught up and their rest shall be glorious."

I thus distinguish between them and us, because at that time they shall grow up with a more complete and perfect understanding of the laws of life and health, and they will observe them. And the temptations and evils that surround us on every hand shall be removed from them. The elements that are now under the control of the prince and power of the air, and charged with death, which we are constantly brought in contact with, will then be removed; the elements will be sanctified, the curse will be removed from the earth and its surrounding atmosphere, and the powers of darkness that rule in the atmosphere will be confined to their own region, and the tabernacles of the children of men shall grow up without sin unto salvation.

Hence their tabernacles shall not be subject to pain and sickness like unto ours. There will be no pain and sickness because there will be no breach of the laws of life and health. There will be no intemperance of any kind, because there will be no evil spirit at the elbow continually ready to allure and draw into sin. But the Spirit of the Lord will be with every person to guide him constantly, and the law of the Lord will be written in his heart, so that one will not need to say to another—"This is the way, walk ye in it." There will be no devil to tempt on the right hand and on the left, saying, "This is the way, walk in it." Thus having this good influence continually around them to keep them in the straight path, they will grow up without sickness, pain or death.

There will be a change wrought in their tabernacles, which is equivalent to death and the resurrection; but they will not sleep in the dust of the earth. Their tabernacles shall not moulder back into corruption, but they shall be like Jesus Christ's most glorious tabernacle, who never knew sin; and he is the only being we read of whose tabernacle did not see corruption, except a few who obtained before hand the privilege of translation.

We read—"Enoch walked with God and he was not, for God took him." The apostle Paul says he was translated. The revelations given through Joseph Smith teaches that a great many others in Enoch's day obtained the same blessing.

We read in the Book of Mormon of three Nephites, upon whom the Lord wrought a change that their bodies should not see corruption; but that change was in itself equivalent to death and the resurrection. Whether the complete change took place in that day, or whether a still greater change remains to take place with them, we are not informed positively. But Mormon writing about it gives it as his opinion, and says it was so signified to him by the Spirit, that there remained for them a greater change in the great day when all should be changed.

Suffice it to say that because of the fall of Adam the elements of the earth of which we partake have sown the seeds of mortality in the earthly tabernacle, so that it becomes necessary they should all undergo the same change, whether by returning to the dust, and
