CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS IN VADED.

GRADUALLY but continually encroachments are being made upon the rights supposed to be guaranteed to citizens by the Congress of the United States. That civil and religious liberty which the government of this country was established to protect is being undermined, and the time is not far distant when those who have assisted in the work, or who have encouraged or consented to it because it was done, for the purpose of assailing an unpopular religious body, will find it turned in other directions in which they are personally interested and it will be too late to arrest its progress The wrong done towards one part of the body politic, however small it quences of the fraud. may be or weak it may seem to be, is sure to affect other parts and ultimately the whole structure.

The special legislation against the "Mormons"in 1863, followed by a wider step in the same direction in 1882 was aimed at "an establishment of need not add, is expressly forbidden in the First Amendment to the Constitution. That marriage is and always has been, among a very large number of people, "an establishment of religion" cannot be reasonably disputed. That it is with the Church of Jesua Christ of Latter-day Saints, commonly called the "Mormons," is positively certain. It is also irrefutable that in the theory and practice of marriage as held by that Church, there is no unconstitutional infringement upon the natural and civil rights of citle zens. It follows then that legisla tion against that "establishment of religion" is as unnecessary as it is unconstitutional, because govern
