Something For Nothing.

"It is astonishing," said an observant woman not long ago, "how much some people will give of their time every day getting something for nothing. Now I know my children constantly that anything of value can never be had for nothing. There is work waiting at home, and there are bargains out in the city, and you will find me in both every minute I can spare, but in the end you will find that the bargains are obtained only by those who know what to buy, where to buy and how to buy."—Chicago Tribune.

Avoiding the Present.

The Louisville Courier-Journal tells of an extremely economical man who lives on Low creek in Greene county. He is a close student of the Bible, and doesn't propose to use or find cause to use one word of it he can help it. A few nights ago he was entertaining the neighborhood by means of a phonograph. Suddenly there came from the machine the words: "Give us this day our daily bread." After hearing the words over and over again he arose, went to the door, and called to his wife: "Sarah, you needn't bother to get any breakfast for me in the morning. I'm going to bed hungry, and I'll get up hungry, and I'll be hungry all day. I'm not going to have anything to do with any such prayer as that."

Mrs. Adams of Utah.

Mrs. Adams suffered from an eruption on the skin for which our Ripans Tabules would be a remarkable benefit, with the following directions (March 25, 1895): "Apply this to your face every night after you are in bed. Let it be on all night, and when it gently oil in the morning with a powder also and Black Cloth, but wash not your face. If you are not satisfied for a day or two, or three, it is better, for then you may lay it on fresh on the morning, and let it continue on all day and wipe it gently off at night as before with the Black Cloth. I had almost forgot to tell you, you must not let it on always, for after it very well together, till it as much as possible, then power out a little quickly into this white box, and, lying on your back, take a piece of sponge, put it upon your Face thick and rub together. If you like it you may have as much of it as you please at a Western Warning."

When it arrives, she is too busy with her husband's attempts to attend to her case. "If my poor Pussy is to die, I shall soon make one of it. I do not trouble with my Blake Pain and for Blake which what a Blessing I shall be." Blood-less but productive recommendation for her husband.—Longman's Magazine.

Sweet Auburn.

Of the many sights of Auburn that were familiar to Goldsmith's eyes, only a few remain. The "loser will" is still there, but like how for many a year, and overgrown with tangled weeds. Close by, too, is the "sloop brook," more vain to no name than would be imagined from On poem, so perfect in its reflection of lodge and sky. A mile or so away a "decent church" tops the hill, occupying the same site and doubtless presenting the outward image of the building in which the Rev Oliver often listened to the sermons of the vicar of Wakefield. Not far distant, on the summit of a modest hill that rises from the plain, stands a rudely built cumulus stone pillar, which is said to mark the exact center of Ireland. The wayfarer in these parts cannot resist the thought that in the near future, when Ireland gets its share of those who turned in exile after of the Immortal and the statues of the great, this fashionable country will become indeed the center of the Green Isle.—New England Magazine.

Tiles

The latest, finest and handsomest designs that are expressions of everything a hat should be; in short, everything in hats for spring wear is offered in our new stock. Our rats will not wear out because they are good, not cheap imitations of a genuine article. Poorly made hats are a counterfeit if it can never pass current. We exclude them from our stock. Your hat won't wear much this season if bought at our store, but this is the great point for hat buyers to consider.

Come and examine our immense stock, for we have made great cash purchases to obtain low cost, therefore small profits on low cost bring low prices and make customers.
