

FIGHT FOR WEALTHY
FRENCHMAN'S CORPSE.

Special Correspondence.

PARIS, July 14.—Jaded Parisians have found something to interest and amuse them in a keen legal fight which is now going on for the possession of a corpse, between the children of a wealthy druggist by his first wife and his young and pretty widow. The druggist amassed a fortune of over $1,000,000 by a patent medicine which he invented, and left both his widow and children well provided for. He was buried in the family vault which belongs to the latter. The widow wants the body removed to another part of the cemetery that she may have the consolation of being laid at rest beside it when her turn comes to depart from this mundane sphere. The children contend that they have prior rights in the remains of their defunct sire and that the solace of being buried beside him some day should be theirs.

That the druggist was devoted to his second wife is shown not only by the generous provision he made for her in his will, but by the fact, according to the story told by his other heirs, that he lived with her for a year and a half before the divorce court set her free to marry him. He died suddenly in a motor car of a serious complaint from which he was suffering, while he was on a tour in the south of France with her. When he breathed his last they were twenty miles from the nearest big town which had been their destination, and as none of the country people on the way would consent to receive the body, the poor woman drove all that distance, supporting the gruesome burden in her arms. This is adduced by her counsel as proof that, despite their disparity in years, she was ardently attached to him. As a reward for such affection, he maintains, she should be made the custodian of his remains. The counsel on the other side says that such touching proof of wifely devotion affords no evidence that the young and pretty widow will not some day console herself with another husband. And that husband, if he survives her, would, he contends, strenuously object to having her buried alongside of his predecessor. He draws a touching picture of the loneliness of the deceased patent medicine proprietor, left to moulder in a solitary and neglected grave, and eloquently protests against a decision being given which would expose him to such a fate.

The Sun Not Burned Out.

It has been stated by such authorities as Kelvin, Newcomb, and Hall that the future of the sun's activity will be comparatively short—not more than 10,000,000 years—and some have even suggested that the sun's activity already shows signs of waning. So far as this from being the case that only one-fourth of our supply of energy has been expended and three-fourths are yet in store for the future life of the planetary system. This opens up to our contemplation a decided and refreshing view of the future, and will give renewed hope to all who believe that the end of mundane progress is not yet in sight. Not only should the future possibilities of scientific progress be vastly extended, but there will in all probability be the most ample time for the further development of the races of beings inhabiting this planet. According to this view, the evolution of our earth is still in its infancy, with the youth of its splendor far in the future.—T. J. See, in the June Atlantic.
