

THE NEWS' SUPPLEMENT.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 19, 1865.

BY AMY RANDOLPH.

"Well, Rosy," he said, throwing himself into the cushioned rocking-chair, and tossing his hat into the window seat, "I've heard of a fellow who wants to buy the clover medder up on the Edgewood road."

"Have you, papa?" asked Rosa, rather faintly.

"It's Deacon Nehemiah Lorimer's son, up to Hemlock Hollow, and——"

"Lorimer!" repeated Rosa, turning red.

"Why yes! don't you remember Deacon Lorimer that got a bill from his first wife? She was Mehitable Jones. Wal, his son has bought the farm a jinin, and he'll give me 'leven hundred dollars for that 'ere clover medder. Only I'm afeard your mother won't be willin' to sign it away—she's so set about keepin' property in the family, and it's her land. Eleven hundred dollars is a pretty nice sum of money, and that clover medder always an out-o'-the-way corner o' land. However, he's comin' round to-morrow to see about it, and I guess likely he'll talk your mother over. Folks do say he's a very fore-handed young man, although I hain't never seen him."

Rosa paid very little attention to the Squire's circumstantial statements—she was smiling to herself to think how little there was in common between Deacon Nehemiah Lorimer's lank sons, up at Hemlock Hollow, and her handsome, dashing young New Yorker! Only the name, and we have Shakesperian authority for saying "What's in a name!"

There was more in that than Rosa thought.

"Where is your mother?" asked the Squire, watching his daughter's busy hands and thinking within himself that she was certainly growing prettier every day of her sunshiny life.

"Gone to spend a day or two at Elder Slingerland's" faltered Rosa, endangering her fingers rather more than the apples in her trepidation lest the good Squire should ask any more dangerous questions.

But the Squire evidently had no such intentions. He leaned comfortably back in his chair, yawning in a most portentous manner and leisurely unfolding a red silk pocket handkerchief for the purpose of spreading it over his rubicund face, so that he might take his afternoon nap in an orthodox manner.

"He's going to sleep," thought poor little Rosa, "and I haven't told him!"

She waited and fidgeted a minute or two in the faint hope that the Squire might possibly change his mind. But the clock ticked sleepily, and the blue flies buzzed against the window panes in a most somnolent style.

"Papa!" she ventured at last in desperation,

"Eh! what!" ejaculated Mr. Millet, starting up, and throwing off the red silk pocket-handkerchief. "Did you call me pet?"

"Yes, papa," faltered Rosa; I—I wanted to speak to you about——"

"Well, my dear, about what?"

Rosa came to her father's side, and knelt down with her cheek on her knee, "You know, papa, I told you the other day how dearly and truly he loved me, and, how—how I was fond of him!"

There—it was all out now!

"Nonsense! trash! fiddlestick!" roared the indignant Squire, springing to his feet with a wrathful countenance. "I told you I wouldn't hear another word—and I won't. You get married! Why you are but a child yourself!"

THE JORDAN IRRIGATION

WILL be ready to give titles to land and water in a few days. Those having claims and wishing to fence this spring will please let the undersigned know with whom they wish to join lands, and how much water and land they will pay for by the middle of April next.

Those wanting land and wishing to pay in work must apply immediately, as there is but little work to be given out. Fourteen and one-fourth miles of the canal are under contract and will be finished by the middle of April.

Those that have paid towards building the old dam and water ditches and have no title to land and water can have the same by paying up to ten dollars per acre, if paid so as to assist in opening up the present canal.

Those who hold land and pledged last fall to the undersigned that they would pay ten dollars per acre in instalments, the last of which was to be paid by the 1st April, 1865, are hereby requested to fulfil their pledges.
