THE CHICKASAWS.

The work of the Lord is steadily but surely growing and spreading in fulfillment of the predictions of ancient as well as modern Prophets. An instance in mind is the missionary labors of the Elders in the Indian Territory. During the last few years their labors have been extended from one tribe into nearly all of the more important tribes in the territory. Among the latter are the Chickasaw Indians, in whose nation there seems to be a good field for missionary work. Although the Elders have at different times gone into this nation, it was not until about two years ago that any of them devoted their entire attention to it and succeeded in securing a place to establish a headquarters. Since that time there have been from two to six Elders laboring in the Chickasaw nation. These people seem to be less interested in religion than some of the other civilized tribes.

The full-blood Chickasaws were at one time very superstitious, and even at the present time witch doctors and "Pashofah" dances are popular in some localities. It is not many years since an elderly woman suffered death for the alleged crime of witchcraft, but their faith in such things is rapidly growing weaker.

The "Pashofah" dance is still kept up among them, though it is not as popular as it once was. The object of this dance is to heal the sick, and it is claimed a great many diseases are cured thereby. It is conducted about as follows: The patient is placed in a house facing the east. The medicine man is the only person admitted into the house and he performs his craft in secret. Meanwhile the guests dance with great energy in front of the patient, all present being expected to take part therein, while a young woman of the tribe jingles a few
