

That "Lewd" Decision.—A correspondent, "Query," propounds the following questions concerning the point at issue in Judge Zane's decision in the Vandercook case:

"On Saturday, Judge Zane, in the habeas corpus proceedings, held that the city ordinance was valid, the words 'lewd and lascivious conduct' having reference to open acts; he also said that the arrest was illegal, the warrant not showing a breach of the ordinance. Now, if the portion of the warrant published in the papers was a correct copy, the actual language of the ordinance being used, how is it that 'lewd and lascivious conduct' in an ordinance means one thing, and when written on a warrant of arrest means another? Was there any evidence before the Court that the act complained of was in private?"

If "Query" will examine the whole matter closely and give the subject reasonable consideration, he will see that the question was not as to the validity of the ordinance or the legality of the arrest. The situation was simply this: Two "officers of the court" had been arrested for having committed a filthy crime; a number of other anti-"Mormon" morality screechers were in imminent danger of being placed in the same box and having their infamy exposed; the case was a desperate one with them, and something must be done to prevent the truth from being made public. It was for this end that Utah's Chief Justice risked a reputation of years of official life in order to hide from the world the immoral practices of his associates. The words "lewd and lascivious conduct" used in the ordinance were also used in the warrant. If they could be reasonably interpreted to mean one thing in the former instance, there was nothing to show that the same words should not receive the same definition in the latter document. There was nothing on the face of the warrant to indicate that the offense was not committed openly, as the Judge held the expression was intended to mean, nor was there any evidence introduced to show that the act was a private one. The warrant alleged the offense designated in the ordinance, in the same language, and a contrary state of facts was not shown, the validity of the ordinance being the question raised by Vandercook's attorneys, and not any supposed difference between the section in dispute and the wording of the warrant. The discharge of the prisoner was a foregone conclusion, because of its necessity for the anti-"Mormon" cause, as we stated before the case was heard. It will be perfectly plain to a casual observer that in every instance where a "Mormon" is interested, all decisions will be adverse to him if made by Judge Zane; but if a hallowed deputy marshal, or an "officer of the court," commits an offense, nothing will be left undone to turn him loose upon the community to continue his pernicious acts, and then hold him up as an example for those who are "struggling upward" to the Scandal-monger's plane of immorality to pattern after. The motto of the Utah courts is not "Let justice be done," but "Down with the 'Mormons.'"
