

STORIES OF WASHINGTON.

Speaker Cannon and the Hat—Senator Quay and the Age of Discretion—Pleasing and Humorous Incidents at the White House and National Capitol.

Washington, Jan. 29.—Speaker Cannon was lately the recipient of a somewhat mysterious package bearing the postmark of Manila, Luzon, P. I. It had lain with other official documents on Mr. Cannon's desk since last summer. During a lull in matters the other day the speaker was "ridding up" his desk and throwing away accumulated trash when the package was discovered. He was about to toss it into the wastebasket when Neil, his colored messenger, suggested that it might be something of value.

Senator Quay and a friend were recently discussing the details of a gay youth with whose family both Mr. Quay and his friend are well acquainted. The friend was disposed to be severe in his criticism of the youngster's conduct, but the senator smilingly remarked that, as the boy was all right at heart, it would be well to reserve judgment and give him a chance, and he added that he thought the lad would pull up when he reached the age of discretion.

tered the shop with his friend he found the Ohio senator well lathered, and the barber was just beginning to shave him. "Sorry to bother you, senator, but Mr. X. of Iowa, who isn't looking for any favors, wanted to shake hands with you," Mr. Hull remarked apologetically.

Representative Hunter of Kentucky, who was elected by a narrow margin, was discussing the case with some Republican members. "It was a narrow squeak," he said. "The local courts enjoined me from having my name printed on the ballots, but with it all the voters wrote my name in, and I was elected."

At the close of a cabinet meeting the other day a boy about 10 years of age dashed into the executive office and rushed toward Arthur Simmons, the negro messenger.

check this flagrant display of negro intimidation within a few feet of the president of the United States. The lad was attired in a sailor uniform and had a bluestocking cap drawn over his head and ears, which almost concealed his face.

By the way, Archie Roosevelt is a great friend of the White House police. One of them got into a little trouble recently over some slight neglect of duty and went to young Roosevelt about it.

Senator Spooner of Wisconsin was recently walking past a Washington theater where Amelia Bingham and her company were giving a production of "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson." Although the senator was not in evening dress, he hesitated before the handsome pictures displayed in the entrance to the theater and finally made his way into the lobby. "How much are the seats?" he asked as he went up to the ticket seller's window.
