LONDON, 12.—Norman, Gallagher, Wilson, Curtin and Ausburgh were taken to Bow Street Court this morning in the prison riven at a rapid pace and accompanied by a guard of armed police mounted constables. A crowd followed the prisoners to Court House. The whole was lined with policemen, and precautions to prevent rescue. The prisoners appeared per-calm. The prisoners were arraigned before Judge Ingham. Smythe, Gould and Burney appeared for the defense, opening for the prosecution and declaring there was no doubt in the evidence obtained by the authorities that a conspiracy is in existence in America, the purpose of which was the destruction of property in this country; that the work was done by the conspirator was white; that some men now on trial in court were from the United States for the purpose of putting the scheme into operation; that they had furnished means and men to establish the recently discovered dynamite manufactory a Birmingham and that Gallagher, Wilson and Norman visited the manufactory. Whitehead, at his place in Birmingham, with the purpose of going to London a supply of explosives. In this connection dates an important link in the chain of evidence concerning Norman.

On April 22d, a man went to Euston to live; he remained 14 days, on April 2, went to Birmingham, saying he was going to get work. He did not return at the stated time. His plan was, without doubt, changed while in Birmingham, and it was decided he should take a package of glycerine to Southampton Street Hotel, where Gallagher had a room for Norman. The latter telegraphed Gallagher the 6th of April, that he would return to his quarters in Euston Square. He did come back, and at Euston Square a man took the box brought by Norman containing some bags of nitro glycerine, and left them at a place in Southampton street where the police subsequently made the arrest. Poland proposed to show that Norman and Wilson repeatedly communicated with Gallagher, known as Fletcher. Wilson visited Gallagher, saying his tailor telegraphed on the 3d of April, "I am sorry I can't see you to-day; I must call on Alfred," supposed to mean Whitehead; "will see you to-morrow." The man who was known as Wilson went to Birmingham with an empty portmanteau, and returned with nitro-glycerine in it. Norman's statement that he was a clerk, etc., had been regarded by a gentleman from the United States as a tissue of falsehoods. To show that Gallagher was really a dispenser of the funds of the society, Poland pointed out the fact that he had in his possession when arrested £115 in English notes stamped by a New York firm in the same way in which the note taken from Norman was stamped. It was clear, therefore, that he was one of the principal conspirators, and not an innocent clerk or even the dupe of a sharp rascal. Gallagher himself brought the shreds of war from the United States. Gallagher himself communicated with all the subordinate conspirators. Gallagher telegraphed Whitehead on the 27th of March, promising to see him soon. Curtin, on arrival in London, reported by letter to Gallagher, not being advised of the latter's arrest. When the officers captured Curtin, a certain diary of his recorded the places visited since his arrival in England. The list included Glasgow, Blackburn and Liverpool. It would appear in evidence that Curtin was also one of the chief persons of the conspiracy. The papers in Gallagher's luggage referred to Ausburgh, whom Gallagher visited. O'Connor went to the United States five years ago, and letters showed he had established relations with O'Donovan Rossa, McClure, and Devey. He returned to this country a short time since under the name of Dallin. Certain of his actions led to suspicion that he was not a person to be trusted at large and he was put under surveillance. On the 3rd of April he was observed taking observations of persons in Parliament.

Poland intimated that he would ask to have the prisoners remanded for a week so he might become informed of the proceedings in other parts of the Kingdom where similar cases are being examined. He also intimated that the charge against these men would be changed from the comparatively simple one on which they are now arraigned to the more serious offences of conspiracy, by a band of men to effect the objects of their conspiracy regardless of the loss of life which would result. It was a question only a magistrate could decide, whether they were not indictable for conspiracy to murder. It is possible, furthermore, that at a future stage of this proceeding a charge would be lodged against them under the treason and felony act.

Gould said he watched the case for Gallagher, whose counsel would be engaged hereafter. A lot of papers were put in evidence, including the catalogue of a chemical firm in Birmingham. The latter was found at Norman's lodgings, and contained full directions for making dynamite.

The proprietor of the hotel where Norman was stopping when arrested was brought face to face with Gallagher, and testified to the best of his belief he was the person who, under the name of Fletcher, visited Norman.

A daughter of the hotel proprietor from whom Gallagher engaged rooms for Norman, positively identified him as Fletcher.

The proprietor of the hotel at which Ausburgh stopped identified Gallagher as the man who had visited Ausburgh.

A clerk at the Charing Cross Hotel, where Gallagher boarded, failed to recognize any of the prisoners as the men who visited Gallagher.
