The Holy Moses.

We gave only one day to the negroes' rendezvous, called the "Summer Capital," by the salt sea waves, and returned to New York. On our way back we fell in with a gentleman from South Carolina, who, although a carpet-bagger, was a very decent sort of a man [or he would have staid there]. He gave us what would have been an amusing account of affairs in that State, had it not been so horrible. This man Moses, the governor of the State, has committed every crime known to the calendar except murder. His reign is a carnival of crime. Resting upon a mass of ignorant, brutal blacks, elections have ceased to exist, and offices are openly sold for money. There is no part of Africa or the wilds of South America, no island in the West Indies, where such a beastly state of affairs exists. Moses has not only his family in places where they can plunder with impunity, but an army of worthless, unprincipled retainers, who, as chiefs of the negro league, march the negroes out to vote as cattle are led to water or labor. He does not hesitate, however, to prey upon his own family if occasion serves. He had made his cousin Inspector of Phosphates at a heavy salary—an office of as much significance as if he had made him high custodian of the governor's boot-jack, and he bled the young man to such an extent that one-half the salary was taken by his excellency. Notwithstanding this, he called upon his cousin for a thousand dollars. The Inspector of Phosphates hurried around—we believe it is called "shinning" in Wall street—and borrowing the thousand dollars, duly paid over the same. The next day, to his intense disgust, he found himself removed from the pleasing and lucrative business of inspecting phosphates, and a man put in who paid twenty-five hundred dollars for the office.

On another occasion he took a fancy to a likely mulatto girl, and although slavery has been, we are assured, abolished, and the emancipation proclamation is celebrated with music and banners, the governor offered a thousand dollars for the dusky piece of loveliness; and horrible as it seems, the mother accepted or rather agreed to the price. Subsequently this potentate either repented of tendering so large a sum, or probably not having it at the time, he managed to make the girl's acquaintance, drove her about in his carriage, and ended in saving the heavy expenditure. The facts coming to the knowledge of the mother, there was a South Carolina Tilton-Beecher scandal created, all the facts getting into the journals of the State. They did not seem to disturb his excellency.

Governor Moses is a gorgeous gentleman, rather handsome in his personal appearance, reminding one of Lester Wallack—well, rather a corn-fed Wallack, and resembling more the huge colored wood-cuts of that celebrated actor than that actor himself. Like his illustrious chief, General Grant, Moses seeks frequent relaxation from the cares of State. But instead of going to a Long Branch he comes to New York. There is great excitement and rejoicing among the ladies of the pave and the "gay gamboliers" when it is known that he is in town. He generally takes a suite of rooms at the Metropolitan, with a large retinue of humble followers, whose time is occupied in procuring interviews with their magnificent master and the fairest of girls to be found in certain localities of this great metropolis. On these occasions he flings money about in the most lavish manner. He has been known to pay for entertainments at the rate of a thousand dollars a day.

We could fill our journal with choice stories of this sort concerning our South Carolina Turk. And this is reconstruction; and let us paint it an inch thick, to this favor must it come at last. Built on a foundation of brutal ignorance, it rears aloft its shameless front of beastly indulgence, that makes one wonder if he does indeed live in the nineteenth century and makes one of a civilized community.—D. P., in Washington Capital.
