

Makers of Utah History at Old Folks Entertainment

They were all there, all, to the number of nearly 1,000, all except those whose white ribbons had become discolored through physical infirmities which could not combat the eternal-lived elements, all there, gray, white of hair, tottering of limb a few, but all there who could be. For it was the gathering of the clans, the midwinter meet of the old folks, at the Salt Lake theater, Wednesday afternoon. And while they, representing three generations, listened to the dulcet strains of Victor Herbert's "The Serenade," sung by the Salt Lakeers in their honor, misty eyes gazed through mirages of a bygone past stretching over an obstructed road of more than half a century.

Worthy of attention than the tales of bygone days. The Salt Lakeers gave a splendid performance and the old folks were not a bit chary in their applause. But the stage was not where the footlights cast their glamor. It was in the seats wherein those old folks sat. There it was where the story was written, where the lights should have been turned. It was an epic which should be scribed by a master hand.

SPLENDID SUCCESS.

Every arrangement was perfection and there was nothing left undone by the committee to insure the pleasure and comfort of its guests. The orchestra was installed in the seats of the balconies and had the time of their little lives. The Salt Lakeers contributed their services, Spencer Clawson, Jr., donated the orchestral music, the Utah Light & Railway company gave free transportation to and from the theater and also forgot to present a bill for the lights. And everything was in accordance. There was a general feeling that the old folks should have the best of everything and that it should not cost them anything.

During the afternoon Bishop C. W. Nibley in a short address thanked the theater management, the opera company and all of those who had given their services and substance for the entertainment of the old folks.

Along the road he noticed a big auto which he believed was the one he wanted.

Mr. Rager was informed by the conductor that the train would slack down about 10 miles out of Ogden so as to pass another train, and as the train crossed the wagon road that led into Ogden he might be able to catch the automobile. He got off the train and waited. But to his surprise, when they picked him up in the automobile it was Mr. and Mrs. Mackintosh. He was stopped at Farmington and been married.

Mr. Rager accompanied them to Ogden, where the telephone was put into service. Mrs. Collier and her daughter were quickly reconciled and the young people left at once for San Francisco.

The new board of deacons was authorized to secure an assistant pastor, and the pastor stated that all the debts of the church had been paid. The annual reports will be read at the January banquet of the church.

Some were red ribbons some blue, and a very, very few were adorned with the immaculate white. The first were most in prominence. They betokened the fact that they had acquired the allotted three score and ten. Those with the blue were between 80 and 90 years of age. And those who were fast approaching centenarianism wore the awesome white in their caps and on their breasts. Numerically they were visible in that order. And they were hale, hearty, and whole. They had lived their good lives and bade fair many, very many of them, to look for years to come upon the goodly soil, physical and spiritual, which they had made surpassing fertile.

Top of the World" at the Salt Lake theater opened yesterday morning. With a record of one whole year at the Casino and Majestic theaters, New York city, and the Studebaker theater, Chicago, "The Top of the World" will be presented here by the original company in as complete a manner as that which has characterized its engagement in all the principal cities.

Orpheum—The lively bill of the week had another good turnout last night. The usual daily matinee and evening performances are given.

Colonial—"Human Hearts" will run out the week and a packed audience is already assured for Saturday afternoon.

Grand—The Willard Mack Co. in "Janice Meredith" continues to please its audiences. Miss Leon will appear in "Mavroune" next week.

Shubert—The advance sale for Mr. Charles Cherry's presentation of "The Bachelor" is now going on at the Shubert Theater.

Mission—An exceptionally good bill opened at the Mission theater Wednesday night, including seven breezy acts and one of the finest moving pictures ever seen in this city. The show is a mirth provoker from start to finish, and there is a good laugh every minute.

Edith Haney, a "pocket edition" comedienne, gives a number of fine character changes, imitating a dancing and talking doll, and appearing in appropriate costumes to match her Dutch songs. Barney Williams splits the ribbles with a bunch of fresh gags and several fine sleight of hand tricks.

Howard Missimer, William Wainwright and J. W. Lucifer present a one-act fantastic comedy, "Mister Stranger," in which an engaging plot leads the audience to a fine point of suspense and then ends in a joke. Two actors, Richard Bresler and Pugh, are rivals on the stage and in love. Bresler proposes to a beautiful girl at a wine supper, and then reverts his bibulous contract, but the hour for the wedding is set, and he resolves to face the music. Pugh gives it out that he has sailed for Europe on the wedding day, but goes to Bresler's apartments in disguise, and introducing himself as "Mr. Stranger," offers to extricate Bresler from his predicament for $1,000. Pugh then pictures the joys of a bachelor's life so warmly that Bresler desperately consents to any measure that might result in saving him from marriage. Pugh tells him that "it is all fixed" and acts as though he were leaving, but he slips back after slamming the door, and hides himself. Bresler then scans a painting of the girl he is supposed to marry within the hour, and suddenly falls in love with her. He rushes about madly to dress for the wedding, but Pugh walks up behind him and sticks a revolver into his face, warns him to sit down and keep still. Quigley, Bresler's valet, comes in and answers the telephone, reporting that the father of the prospective bride has sent word that she had eloped with the coachman. The rival actors fall with the curtain. Frank Killion and Dick Moore feature their original "Dope" song, concerning a man who thinks he knows all of the crowned heads of Europe, has Rockefeller for a footman, sits dinner with J. Pierpont Morgan, and runs aeroplane excursions to Mars with the Wright brothers.

McLellan and Carson appear in a gorgeous scenic novelty, "The Awakening of the Toys," showing a Christmas picture in which the world's champion roller skaters stand like dolls and gradually "come to life," after which they do all kinds of fancy stunts on roller skates.

Will J. Harris and Harry Robinson, assisted by three good male voices and four pretty "broilers," present "A Bunch of Kicks."

LOT SMITH SURVIVORS NOW SMALL IN NUMBER

Reinstatement of Pensioners Means That Several Whose Names Were Erased Will Receive Money Due.

The reinstating of the pensioners of the Lot Smith company by the department at Washington, D. C., means that three or four in the company will be given pensions from the date they were cut off, which was only a few years ago. According to one of the survivors of the company, there is not more than a dozen of them left, the erasing of the names from the pension roll was due to the animus of the commissioner of pensions at the time and not by any act of Congress.

"Not all the members of the company were cut off," said one of the company yesterday. "The commissioner cut off only a portion and did that personally. I do not believe there were more than two or three affected that way. Personally one of the survivors, Spencer, being cut off and there was one other brought to my attention."

"After the commissioner had cut off these men he began recommending to Congress that no recognition be given Lot Smith's company. He declared that they should not receive a pension, as they had no record of aiding in the rebellion. An act of Congress affecting all of them was asked for, but Congress did not comply with the recommendation and the cutting of the men off the pension roll was purely personal on the part of the commissioner."

"I do not believe there is more than a dozen of that company of 90 men now in Utah. The number now alive live in Utah in Idaho."

The company was mustered into service in the regular army as a part of Col. Collins's forces, whose duty it was to protect the United States mail and the telegraph wires from the Missouri river to the Pacific coast. The special duty of Lot Smith's company was to guard the way from Ft. Laramie to Ft. Hall in Idaho. Although the company did not fight the southern forces, it had many skirmishes with the Indians who were hostile in those days. The company saw active service along the frontier for three months, during which time it was in a number of engagements with the red skins.

A RUNAWAY MATCH.

Chums, Telephones, Uncles and Parents All Put to Rout by Cupid.

While Rev. Elmer I. Goshen waited in the office of Phillip J. Mackintosh, a mining man, in the Newhouse building, at noon yesterday, waiting to pronounce two young people "man and wife," the couple was fleeing northward in an automobile intent on reaching Farmington before an uncle of the bride could reach the place on the Oregon Short Line train.

The participants in the affair were Phillip J. Mackintosh, and Miss Lucile Collier, a University of Utah student. Mr. Mackintosh has been a frequent caller at the Collier home, 418 south Tenth East street. It is said that there was no particular parental objection to his suit for the hand of Miss Collier, with the exception that she was only 17, and the groom was 30 years old. They were asked to wait.

Everything went well until recently when several of the students at the university began to pay attention to Miss Collier. Then Mackintosh thought it was time to act. Rev. Goshen was asked to be present and the hour was noon yesterday.

Before leaving the university Wednesday morning, Miss Collier left a note to a chum, saying she was going to be married at noon and would leave at once for San Francisco. The chum called up the Collier home and trouble was started.

Mrs. Collier called her brother, who has an office in the Newhouse building, and in a few minutes he found the young people in Mr. Mackintosh's office. While he went back to his office to get his hat and coat, they slipped out, secured an automobile and started for Farmington.

When it was discovered that they had slipped away, Harry Rager, another uncle to the bride, was notified and he boarded the limited train for Ogden. As the train made no stops between Ogden and Salt Lake he hoped to beat the couple to Ogden, where he expected that they would be married.
