

Royalty and the Automobile

Most of the Leading Sovereigns of Europe Have Adopted the Fad

Francis Joseph, the Venerable Emperor of Austria, is About the Only Exception. The Shah of Persia is an Ardent Devotee of the Craze. Amusing Happenings to Royalty on the Road.

AUTOMOBILING is fast taking the place of horse racing as the "sport of kings." Even Edward of England, whose devotion to the thoroughbred is famous, has a garage full of motor cars and travels in one of them to the great race meets of the English turf. The Kaiser has no fewer than six automobiles and is awaiting the delivery of several more. Francis Joseph, the aged emperor of Austria, is practically the only monarch of Europe who has not been bitten by the automobile germ. He has too many more serious things to think about to devote much time to sport of any kind.

Foremost among royal motorists, as one might expect, is the reckless young king of Spain. When he isn't riding horses up stairs into his mother's drawing room Alfonso is careering around his kingdom in a sixty horsepower car, often with his new queen by his side. Alfonso did most of the love-making which preceded his recent marriage in a big touring car, to the consternation of the staid Spanish grandees. It was no uncommon sight at Biarritz last spring to see the king of Spain and his sweetheart whizzing like meteors through the streets. On the day after their wedding, which came so near being the day of their deaths as well, the young king and queen displayed their courage and their confidence in their subjects by riding in an automobile, unescorted, through Madrid.

Before his marriage it was Alfonso's greatest delight to scare his courtiers out of their seven senses by his hair-raising exploits as a chauffeur. The queen mother and the cabinet almost went down on their knees to him, begging him to act less like Jehu. Once the king made the run from San Sebastian to Bilbao at the rate of sixty miles an hour, with the minister of public instruction, Senor Mellado, following in another car. The unhappy minister was loyally trying to keep up the pace set by his royal master, while the king was trying to determine to make the minister take his dust, when suddenly both machines, one after the other, went into a ditch at a bend in the road. The king got off with a sprained wrist, but the minister of public instruction had his head cracked, and his secretary was badly hurt in the legs.

This catastrophe, however, did not dampen Alfonso's ardor, and it was not long after it that he collided with a donkey in the outskirts of San Sebastian. The donkey died. Its owner, a woman, quite naturally asked for an indemnity. King Alfonso drew out his purse and offered her a hundred pesetas ($20). The woman, who had recognized the king, exclaimed, "Excuse me, your majesty, but I think that a donkey which has been run over by a king is worth much more than a hundred pesetas." "Very well," replied the king, smiling, "here's another hundred pesetas, but at any rate let me have something to show for my money." So saying, he pulled out a knife and cut off one of the dead donkey's ears. Putting the ear into his pocket, Alfonso jumped into the machine and continued his journey with more velocity than ever. King Alfonso has little mercy on his aide-camps and before starting on a particularly nerve racking run will ask them, "Have you made your wills—have you left instructions regarding your funerals?" and similar comforting questions.

Scarcely less enthusiastic than Alfonso as a motorist is King Victor Emmanuel of Italy. All his leisure time the Italian monarch spends on the road. He uses his machine in his business also. In September, 1905, after the great Calabrian earthquake, and again when Vesuvius broke loose, Victor Emmanuel and Queen Helena went in their motor car to the scene of suffering and into the most dangerous places. All along the road they stopped and left their automobile to cheer crowds of weeping women and children. At Vesuvius the king drove his car up toward the volcano, until its further progress was stopped by a stream of lava.

King Victor and Queen Helena on one occasion took the liberty of crossing the frontier in their machine and scoured the neighborhood of Modena. On their return they were accosted at the boundary line by a customs official. "Where do you come from?" the official asked. "From Modena," was the reply. "Where is the number of your car?" "There is none, I believe."

"Aha! And you would enter Italy? What is your name, if you please?"

"Come on now, no feeling, what is your other name?"

"Emmanuel."

"Your profession?"

"Good heavens!" the king broke out. "I have heretofore enjoyed the reputation of being the only Victor Emmanuel in my own kingdom."

The customs official promptly had an attack of apoplexy. Queen Helena was immediately amused and it is said that the king as his car moved on thumbed his nose at the officious official.

"Victor!"

The dowager Queen Margherita, King Victor's mother, is a great chauffeur. Not long ago she was prowling about in the country when her car had one of those tantrums that are worse than the moods of a mule. Floundering with it did no good, as usual, and the ex-queen had to abandon her balking vehicle and make the 15 centesimal journey back to Rome in a common trolley car. At another time she narrowly escaped destruction through the act of some later of automobiles who put a big bowlder at a bend in a road over which she was to pass. It was recently reported that the dowager queen would soon come to America with her automobile and tour the country.

The car of the Shah of Persia is fitted up in true oriental luxury and so arranged that he can lie down in it if he wants to. It is a fifty horsepower machine, but the Shah isn't speed mad, and the car usually drags two or three trailers in the shape of carriages carrying his courtiers. Once when the autocrat wanted to go out for a little spin it was found that no gasoline was available. "Wouldn't brandy do?" asked his majesty. "That has lots of alcohol in it," the chauffeur thought brandy would do. "Go and get some of that '73 brandy," the Shah said to his cupbearer. "But, your majesty," expostulated the scandalized courtier, "what brandy is worth $11 a quart." "What of that?" was the Shah's response. "I want to ride." And the royal Persian automobile was accordingly stoked with brandy at $11 a bottle.

King Edward, democratic though he is, had an automobile adventure not long ago that must have ruffled his kindly dignity a bit. A young gentleman who is learning engineering was being taught on an English road to run a motor car. The car had stopped at the roadside for some minor repairs, blocking the road. Suddenly a big car with two men in it came up and stopped. "Ard a second, old cocky!" cried the young man's driver as he made way for the newcomers. As the strange car whirled on the driver remarked, "There's no number on that car." "No; the king doesn't need to carry a number," replied the engineer.

King Edward was once held up in Norfolk in his own country, not by a zealous policeman, but by an indignant carter, who drew his wagon across the road and forcibly delivered his opinion as to motor cars in general and this motor car in particular. Kings aren't spared the ignominy of being halted for speeding, as Alfonso and Victor Emmanuel can testify. Alfonso was once arrested in Paris and asked by a gendarme his name, profession and address. "Alfonso de Bourbon, king of Spain, Palace Mirama, San Sebastian," said the motorist. The policeman put his notebook away, touched his hat and motioned the king to proceed, while the crowd which had gathered "joshed" the gendarme until he fled.

The Kaiser takes his automobilism seriously, as he does everything he undertakes. Recently he raced a German express train for several miles and beat it by nine minutes. Sometimes German express trains go quite fast too.

King Leopold of Belgium was one of the first monarchs to take up the automobilism fad. President Roosevelt doesn't care much for it. He prefers his four saddle horses since he was thrown from an automobile, narrowly escaping a broken neck. Representative Longworth and his wife, the president's daughter, are very fond of motoring, but they, too, may have lost some of their enthusiasm since their recent accident at Wuerzburg, when they were cast into a ditch.

Motoring has achieved the dignity of having a patron saint, and all the royal chauffeurs and chauffeuses bear his image on their cars. The saint is Christopher. On Queen Margherita's machine St. Christopher appears in silver, with the royal arms above him, and below this inscription, composed by the queen herself: "St. Christopher preserve us from the perils of the way and protect us from the incidents of the journey."

Queen Margherita and all her companions wear gold medals with the same image and inscription. They are prudent to invoke saintly protection.

BILLINGS SUGAR PLANT.

New Factory Ready for Operation Next Month.

Charles H. Boetcher, vice-president of the Great Western Sugar company of Colorado, and a gentleman who is heavily interested in beet sugar throughout the west, is in the city today. Mr. Boetcher comes last from Billings, Montana, where he, together with New York sugar people, is building a 1,200 ton beet sugar factory. The plant will be ready for operation within 30 days, and will draw from the extensive farming district around Billings. Between 5,000 and 7,000 acres of beets are planted, and while the factory will not be taxed to its capacity during the first year, it is expected that sixty or seventy thousand tons of beets will be harvested.

The Billings factory is located about 75 miles from the Mormon settlements in the Big Horn, Wyoming. These places have not yet raised beets, but Mr. Boetcher states that his factory could take all that can be grown there. This is the locality where Senator Smoot and Senator Clark of Wyoming, will meet to look into the feasibility of erecting a sugar factory.

DEADLY DIPHTHERIA.

Two Deaths Occurred Today from the Dread Malady.

Deadly diphtheria has again begun its ravages in this city. Today two deaths occurred from the dread malady, in opposite parts of town. One case was that of Carl Anthon, the 11-year-old son of Conrad A. and Alene Lund, of 525 Fifth East street.

The other was little 7-year-old Sarah Bythway, whose parents, Thomas and Jessie South Bythway, live at 239 Fern Street.

Both funerals were from the parents' residences, and were private, the Lund child being buried at 3 o'clock this afternoon and the other at 1:30.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL.

The wedding of Miss Bernice Clough and Clarence E. Flindro took place last night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Cushing with Rev. P. A. Simpkin officiating in the presence of the families, and a reception followed to the friends and relatives.

The rooms were bright with palms, ferns and flowers, the parlor in yellow, the library in pink and the dining room in pink and white goldenglow, sweet peas and asters being used in pretty design. The bride's gown was of filmy white lawn with trimmings of real lace, and the bridesmaid, Miss Edna Flindro was gowned in pink organdy. Mr. E. P. Clough of Arlington, Ore., was best man. Mr. and Mrs. Flindro left later for the coast, the bride wearing a gown of brown broadcloth with hat to match. They will return here to reside.

Another pretty wedding of yesterday was that of Miss Theresa Brown and Paul R. Morr the ceremony having been solemnized in the Temple during the day, and the reception taking place in the evening at the home of Mrs. M. A. Brain. The rooms were decorated with a profusion of flowers and greens, and intimate friends assisted in entertaining. The bride wore a gown of white mull and carried roses, and her bridesmaids, Misses Ella Smith and Lena Sypher, were also in white and carried bouquets of pink flowers. Mr. Max Morr was best man.

Mrs. B. F. Bauer gave the second of her series of luncheons at the Alti club today, the table covers being laid for eight guests. The table was decorated

MORE THAN MONEY.

A Minister Talks About Grape-Nuts.

"My first stomach trouble began back in 1895," writes a minister in Nebraska, "resulting from hasty eating and eating too much. I found no relief from medicine and grew so bad that all food gave me great distress.

"It was that sore, gnawing, hungry feeling in my stomach (that was so distressing and I became a sick man. Grape-Nuts was recommended as a food that could be easily digested.

"Leaving the old diet that had given me so much trouble, I began to eat Grape-Nuts with a little cream and sugar. The change effected in 24 hours was truly remarkable, and in a few weeks I was back to health again.

"My work as a minister calls me away from home a great deal, and recently I drifted back to fat meat and indigestible foods, which put me again on the sick list.

"So I went back to Grape-Nuts and cream and in four days I was put right again. The old dull headaches are gone, stomach comfortable, head clear, and it is a delight to pursue my studies and work.

"Grape-Nuts food is worth more than money to me and I hope this may induce some sufferer to follow the same course I have."

Miss Sue Sawyer was guest of honor at a delightful card party this afternoon given by the Misses Olive and Rae Barch.

Mrs. Ernest Drake gave a theater party at the Orpheum on Tuesday, following a luncheon at the Commercial club, given in honor of her niece, Miss Grace Davis of Hutchins, Kan.

Miss Veda C. Beebe was hostess at a pleasant dancing party last night at her home, about 50 guests being entertained.

At Waudamere.—The Swedish Missionary society held its annual outing at Waudamere last evening, when about 150 people were present and enjoyed themselves to the top of their bent. In addition to the returned missionaries there were a number of former residents of Sweden on the grounds. The program, consisting of music, recitations, and speeches, all in the Swedish tongue, was held in the dancing pavilion. Each number elicited applause, one of the features was some Swedish dances that were participated in by practically all present. The Waterloo and Twenty-sixth ward choirs also were at Waudamere yesterday. Today the Forest Dale ward is observing its tenth anniversary at Waudamere with fitting exercises. This evening a big banquet and dancing will be the features.

Entertained At Saltair.—Mrs. J. E. Langford yesterday entertained about 100 members of the Twenty-first ward Relief society at Saltair. They were transported to and from the beach in a special car, and also were entertained throughout the afternoon by the various resort concessions. A very toothsome collation was spread on the lower deck and was discussed by the guests of the day.

The Youngest Veteran.

Perhaps the really youngest soldier in the Union army of the Civil war has been discovered at last. We have in Springfield a veteran who at 13 years of age was driving the artillery horses at Gettysburg in the hottest place of the second day. But it seems that Gilbert van Zandt, now a vigorous young man of 55, past commander of the Grand Army at Kansas City, enlisted as drummer boy in the Seventy-ninth Ohio Regiment, Aug. 6, 1862, being then 16 years, 7 months and 16 days old. He served until the close of the war. During Sherman's march to the sea he was dispatch carrier; his father was sergeant in the same company. He was described in his discharge as "13 years old and four feet high."—Springfield Republican.
