RAILROADS KILL COUPLE EACH DAY

Jima Tsukudo is on trial for his life before Judge George C. Armstrong in the criminal court of the Third district. A jury of 12 men is hearing the translated testimony regarding the killing of Torashii Shin, a Japanese laborer, in the fourth of July last, which is charged by the people to the hand of Tsukudo. The trial was begun yesterday morning, but at the noon adjournment adjourned the one Japanese witness, Kondo Oishi, had not completed his testimony.

With the exception of J. D. H. McAllister, deputy county surveyor, who made a drawing of the Spencer house, all the witnesses for the people and the defense are Japanese. The corridor of the courthouse swarms with Japanese laborers who will be called to testify for the prosecution and defense. These men are typical Japanese. While their toll is in the grim of the masons and contractors, where they work with shovels, picks and wheelbarrows, their appearance in court is characteristic of their race. They are clean and well dressed. Wearing the conventional American dress, white shirt and all other clothing, cut in a simple style. Their faces are shaved, their hair neatly trimmed. They deport themselves not at all as the hordes of Greeks, Assyrians and Egyptians when attending court. They talk quietly together, are courteous to court officers and their conduct in the corridors of the courthouse has occasioned no end of favorable comment.

All the testimony given in the court trial is interpreted. Sanford W. Hedges, a missionary lately returned from the Flower Kingdom, and Frank Arima, a local Japanese, are the interpreters. Between the two they manage to get before the jury the record of the stirring incidents of the celebration held in the Spencer house on the day of the murder.

REPORT ON APPARATUS.

The report reaches the apparatus of the fire department, and states that there is a building loss if it is poorly enforced. As to configuration however, very few Dame buildings in this district are built with fire resistance in mind, excepting those which are unusually strong. Fire engines, only a few blocks have entries through the center, hence fire must be fought ordinarily from the street side only. Business section commands both and exposed side openings seldom protect against considerate old defective electrical wiring, general construction, stone or brick, or ordinary wood jointed construction.

STATISTICS OF WATER FLOW.

The report gives the statistics of the water flow from City Creek, Parley's Canyon, Emigration Creek, Big Cottonwood, and the flow of the Little and the Thirteenth East, Parley's canyon, Big Cottonwood, Capital hill and High Line reservoirs, and the last of the six stations with equipment. Adoption is called to the fact that a 25-inch footer is being installed to tap the Big Cottonwood-Cottonwood conduit at Fifth South street, which will supply water to the business district of about 100 pounds, storage reservoirs, aggregating five days supply for fire and domestic purposes are lacking, and street mains are inadequate to distribute water in sufficient quantities. Pipe lines not less than 6 inches should be extended through the entire area of the six blocks constituting the business district, with hydrants to enable firemen to fight fire from the rest of buildings.
