Chicago, 21.—The threat of the steel mills in this district to shut down in view of the unprofitable outlook is the general theme of conversation to-day. Said one gentleman well versed in the finances and business of the country, when talking on the subject: "It appears to me that the relations existing between the railroads and iron mills in this section are somewhat cordial and favorable to a joint bear movement on stock. Perhaps after a few weeks, when these get low enough, when the small fry are frozen out and the large fish have fed to satisfaction, the roads will stop cutting rates, and the mills will conclude to close."

Thurlow Weed, the veteran journalist and statesman breathed his last at 8.55 this morning. the alleged plot against Speaker Keifer: I have not seen the copy of the Enquirer to which you refer, but have learned of it. There is not enough color of truth in the report to form a foundation. There was an idea suggested of offering a resolution to impeach Keifer, for his partisan rulings, but such a thing as resorting to force was certainly never mentioned in any democratic caucus meeting, if it was thought, and I do not believe the latter ever entered the head of any democratic member of Congress.
