O my Father, Thou that dwellest In the high and glorious place. The Bishopric of the Nincteenth

Ward officiated in the administration of the sacrament; Elder Francis Cope being called upon to address the congregation, alluded to his inexperience in public speaking and his inexperience in public speaking and stated that he responded to the request from a sense of duty, it being one of the rules of the Church for the members to hold themselves in readiness to do so when required.

The strangers visiting the city were as trangers visiting the city were and Avostles and inspired men. It had If readiness to do so when required.

If may strangers visiting the city were in the habit of attending the Tabernacle meetings, and the remarks of speakers were sometimes directed to the enlightenment of such persons rather than to that of the Saints. Doubtless What then about those who deny the manual transfer and Apostles? ent were curious to know what the Saints really believed in. Time would not admit of his attempting a full explanation of the Gospel, but he felt to touch upon a few points of the believers the Saints. They were firm believers in the existence of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and also in the Gospel as taught by the Savior; in view of which fact it was somewhat strange that they should be called "Mormons" rather than Christians, or that the former term should be reached the former term should be reached to the saints. They were firm believers do so. When the will of God shall be done on earth as in heaven it will not be by people anxious to thrust their creeds into others at the point of the sword.

A good deal had been said upon the authority of majorities. The majorities. mer term should be regarded as in con-tradistinction to the latter. The title of "Mormons" however, was no more disrespectful in intent as applied to this people than was that of Christians as applied to the early followers of the Savior. But that term, though at first used in contempt, had in the course of time become the most honorable that could be applied to a religious body. The Saints not only assented to the doctrines taught by the Savior and inspired men of old, but they also believed in putting them into practice, and it was the practice, and adverger.

and it was the practice and advocacy of those principles which brought upon them the persecution of the world and the demand that they abandon the same. If a parallel in history were desired it might be found in the Acts of the Apostles. The early Apostles of the Savior might possibly have saved themselves much persecution and suffering had they yielded to the demands of those who were opposed to them. For preaching and practic-ing the doctrines of the Gospel they were first threatened, then imprisoned forbidden to speak in the name of Jesus, but again were they found in the Temple testifying to the people. They had seen the risen Redeemer and they dare not deny it, but resolved to de-clare it and obey Him at, all hazards. There were some wise men in that day who were opposed to persecuting them. Gamaliel advised that the who were opposed to persecuting them. Gamaliel advised that the Apostles be left alone and assured the people that if their counsel or work was of men it would come to nought. but if of God they could not overtheory. but if of God they could not overthrow it. A remarkable thing connected with the Gospel then and now was its of those who taught it, and still another the fact that none were exempt from obedience to it. Even though the Lord deigned to speak to some men that did not exempt them.

It was generally understood that the Saints were a peculiar people, that they gathered together from various nations, that they built temples and engaged in sacred ordinances therein, etc., but the inducements which brought them together and inspired their actions were generally misunderstood—they were not worldly, but rather consisted of the prospect of salvation. A great miracle had been wrought in the gathering of people of various customs and nationalities and producing such a condition of unity as xisted. Though made up principally of the poor of the earth, such as had the Gospel preached to them in the Savior's day, and persons who were comparatively ignorant of scientific truths, they were not ignorant on matters of religion nor were they the off-scourings of society. They, had generally been Bible readers, and many of them had become dissatisfied with other creeds before hearing the Gospel, but when it greeted their ears it had a familiar sound to them. They yielded obedience to it and received the promised testimony of the Holy Spirit, and were then in the condition that the early Apostles were—they could not deny their testi-mony without doing violence to their conscience. Certain doctrines and practices of Certain doctrines and practices of the Saints were strongly objected to by the world generally, and they were informed that as the majority were against them they must be wrong and must succumb. Where would the principles of accepted trath have been to-day had the dictum of majorities always been accepted and obeyed? Many of the prominent Latter-day Saints had been imprisoned, but not for committing any crime. Who had been deprived of life, liberty or the pursuit of happiness by that which they or the people had done? No one. Who had been prevented from marrying one wife been prevented from marrying one wife by their marrying more than one; or deprived of the privilege of marry-ing the woman of his choice by their practice of the plural wife doctrine? No one that he ever heard of. If the rights of their next door neighbors were not affected, why away? It was a curious spectacle to away? It was a curious spectacle to see the world so stoutly opposing the little handful of people known as "Mormons." How many of them would remain true to their religion and their God in the face of such opposition must be proven by experience. If one half turned away it would not prove the principles wrong. The Saints had a social problem to work out in which the whole world was interested, and if earnest, conscientlous terested, and if earnest, conscientious and true they would work it out to the satisfaction of themselves and the ac-

Elder G. G. Bywater said the unity of the faith and doctrine of the Gospel Paul declared that there was "one Lord, one faith and one baptism, one Lord, one faith and one baptism, one God and Father of all" and if men would investigate the doctrine taught in the Bible they would find that they had always been in unison and were narmonious, and that they had one unvarying tendency—the intellectual enlightenment, moral growth and elevation of the human race. There were no contradictions in the testi-mony of the Lord. The announcement of the dectrine of one Lord, one faith of the doctrine of one Lord, one faith and one baptism in the Savior's day was an astounding proclamation to the people, who imagined they had about reached the zenith of human knowledge and wisdom, because of the variety which their worship presented. So popular had the apostasy from the true faith become at that time in the Greek, Roman and Jewish world, that when Paul went to Athens, one of the principal seats of learning, he saw among the many altars erected to the plurality of Gods believed in, one to the name of "the unknown God." In the midst of this pagan idolatry Jesus of nounced that he had come to declare that there was but one living and true God. And His disciples who had been commissioned to go into all the world and preach the Gospel taught the same deciring. No wonder it evoked adverse criticism from the various schools of philosophy and systems of religion. Opposition to the Gospel and its advocates and adherents was anticipated. The Savior said, "I came not pated. The Savior said, "I came not to bring peace, but a sword," and yet it would be found on a careful and prayerful examination of the Gospel that there was nothing in it to produce or provoke antagonism, except the antagonism of the evil one. It was known, however, that he and his emissives would oppose it by all the means

It had been pertinently asked in the Savior's day, which of the Prophets had not been stoned and killed, and the enemies of truth could not point to one who had not been treated with violence. The speaker closed with an exhortation for his hearers to seek to keep the second great commandment, without the ob-servance of which they would still be "in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity." Strange Foundlings.

The tollowing story is told, by Fred Faul, a young sheep owner well known in this community, and we can vouch saw on a sheep range near Wyandotte a coyote, and in attempting to kill it, followed the animal to its den, which was nuder a pile of rocks on the side of a hilf. His shepherd dog, Flora, which had, a few weeks previously, given seven young coyotes, not more than several days old, and, to the surprise of Mr. Faul, began to lick the young coyotes, and finally laid by them in their den and actually suckled them. The old coyote, strange to say, all that time did not attack the dog, and the dog refused to come out until Merrs. Faul and Geo, Schooler had thrown sufficient of the rocks away to get into the den. The seven coyotes were taken out, carried into the house the dog all the time showing great so-licitude for her adopted children. Or reaching the house the young coyotes, their eyes not yet open, were placed on a bed of straw, and since that time the dog has cared for them with the greatest possible canine paternal care Stranger still, she has abandoned her own three pups and will not permi them to come near her. The pupples have to be fed with a bottle, while sho furnishes an abundance of milk for the coyotes. The coyotes are thriving, and in a short time Faul will bring the whole batch to town following his ELECTROPLATING A CORPSE. chemist of Brest has resurrected an old idea about the disposal of the dead. He merely rubs the corpse with plumbago, suspends it in an electric copper bath, and lo! a fine coating of copper is deposited all over it. The corpse, it is said, being thus wholly that off from air will be thoroughly preserved and remain forever. Fruits and flowers have been preserved intact in this way. Bunches of grapes treated with the copper bath are used as decorations for the ceilings and frieze-work of dining rooms, and the effect probate of a certain document them. work of dining rooms, and the effect is extremely artistic. Lilies have been immersed in the bath and delicately coated with dusky, shining metal.

By this method a corpse becomes converted into a copper statue. A man might electroplate his diseased mother-in-law and baye her always. mother-in-law, and have her always near him. A husband might leave it in his will that he should be thus cop-per-coated and set up as a bronze statute in his family library. Then, if will be on the spot as an awful warning and example. Persons who cannot afford to electroplate their dead with copper may use zinc. Poor rela-tions may be disposed of in this way. Zinc is good enough for them.

A DEADLY TUNNEL.-The danger of deficient ventilation have repeatedly been shown in the Mont Cenis tunnel. The ordinary freight train leaving Mo dane at 9 p. m., the 21st day of December, was observed to come to a stand-still at about two miles from the mouth of the tunnel, and did not start again. coming from the opposite direction was informed of the fact, and when coming up to the standing train he found the trainmen on the latter in a dead stupor. They were taken off and transported with all possible speed to Bardonechia, where all of them soon. revived. A similar accident happened in the same tunnel only seven weeks before, and both are ascribed to the bad air in the tunnel, which cannot ventilate itself like the St. Gothard tunnel. Luckily no such accidents have befallen passenger trains, the reason for which may be sought in their more rapid motion .- Scientige Ameri-
