

THE EVENING NEWS.

PRESIDENT
ELDERS AND BISHOPS
OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF
LATTER-DAY SAINTS, IN UTAH TERRITORY
AND ADJACENT SETTLEMENTS.

Young Lawyer.
Justice Sharwood has the following to say regarding the studies and habits of a young man just admitted to the bar:

He cannot afford to be a lawyer unless he continues to be a student of the learning of his profession. Not merely that he should thoroughly investigate the law applicable to every case which may be presented to him, though that, besides its paramount necessity to enable him to meet the responsibility he has assumed, it is the sub-particular that will be the subject of most important progress in his professional acquirements. Let any person, says Mr. Justice Sharwood, study one or two parts of the law fully and minutely, and he will have laid the foundation or acquired the principle, and has acquired a taste for comprehending other parts of the law. But besides this a student of his profession upon somewhat matured plan. When admitted to the bar a young man has just begun, but still has his legal education. If he has mastered some of the more mercantile elements of the law, he has made a valuable acquisition for the study. It is as much as can be expected from his clerkship. There are few young men, however, in the first five or seven years of their practice who devote to a complete acquisition of the science they profess, if they truly feel the value of it and resolve to master it. The danger is, that they make a hasty preparation—from not being made to see and appreciate the depth, extent, and variety of the knowledge they are to seek; they will miss the spirit and character of the law required for profound attainments.

The anxiety of the young lawyer is a natural one at once to get business—so much business as he can throwing over his shoulders, and resorting to every means at hand of gaining notoriety and attracting public attention, with a view of bringing clients to his office. Such an one, in time, never fails to bring all of his talents, but at a sad expense of character, feeling, and conscience. He at last finds that in law, as in every branch of knowledge, a little learning is a dangerous thing, and that he does not know falsehoods often, in its actual application, that which he supposed he certainly did know; and after the most valuable portion of his life has been trifled away upon objects of little worth, he is too apt to conclude that it is now too late to redeem his time. He finds that he has lost his systematic study, and, when he is called upon to give an opinion of particular questions, is confounded and embarrassed, unable to thread his way through the maze of authorities, so recently acquired, only coming to a hasty and unsatisfactory conclusion from them. In short, he has no greater aptitude, ingenuity and discernment than when he set out at the beginning of his studies. No better advice can be given to a young practitioner than to confine himself generally to his office and books, even if this should render him poor. Education is the best map out for himself a course of regular studies, more or less extended, according to circumstances, and the pursuit of the works of the great luminaries of the science. Coke, Farnie, Preston, Powell, Sugden, and others, not forgetting the maxima munda justitiae of John Selden, are to be recommended to investigate for himself the most important and interesting questions by an examination and research of the original authorities. He that has not done this deserves neither the amiable and admirable secrets of the law; and thus may the student proceed in his reading with alacrity and set upon and know how to enter into with delight these rich mines of hidden treasures.—Legal Journal.

WESTERN NOTES.

A fire at Gold Hill, Oct. 6th, one room burned, house flooded with water.

Last Sunday evening was extremely dark for general elemental effects. After the magnificence of a rainbow (mentioned in another place) had passed away, all the hills to the eastward were most brilliantly lighted up by the setting sun. Then the clouds rolled up in a dazzling sheet of red light which soon reached the zenith and tinged all the mountains with scarlet. As this faded away the full moon came up in the west, and the two narrow bands of shadow which it cast, seen thus, wedged between the two clouds, the moon appeared to be several yards in length, and it appeared for a time as so striking and peculiar an object as to attract general attention in the city.—Territorial Enterprise, Oct. 7.

A few days since the daughter of a well-to-do minchum, residing on the headwaters of the Walker River, a handsome and well educated young lady about sixteen or seventeen years of age, was the young man of the Plata persuasion who had been working about her father's place. The girl and her family, who go considerably up the stream of the river, were it would seem did some trail travelling towards the wilderness and the warrior's castle of sagebrush on the Laramie. The Walker, and the father did not care to follow him, leaving his feet or his horse's hoofs. He procured the best horse in the settlement, and rode a distance of 150 miles in eight hours. He carried his runaway daughter so far between Walker Lake and the Stake of the Carson, and matched her home bold-headed. What became of the gallant "lovers" we have not learned, but we do know that the late parent made it his care of him that he will not hereafter hang after a white father-law.—Territorial Enterprise, Oct. 8.
