An imp of indigestion sat
Within the chimney flue
And looked quite dreary as he said
"There's naught for me to do!
I and my brothers, in the stove
Will never escape more,
It's sure one of those wholesome things
They call a 'Wire Gauze Door!'"

OGDEN COLLEGE,
WM. A. OBENCHAIN, A. M., PRESIDENT.

DEAR SIR:

I am more than pleased with my "Howe" Ventilating Stove, and cannot say too much in its praise. In the first place, It is the only base burner I have ever seen that is constructed on correct principles, while in heating capacity and economy of fuel it is all that you claim for it. In the fresh air which it warms and diffuses throughout the house there is a balminess of temperature which I have never found in the heat of any ther stove; not even when sitting close to the stove is there any sense of oppressiveness.

Very truly yours,
WM. A. OBENCHAIN, Pres't.

The "Howe" Ventilator stands today the most remarkable discovery in heating stove construction. We will cheerfully refund the price of any stove not proving Perfectly Satisfactory.

A GOLD MINE IN HIS DREAM.

An Old Hunter Dreams About an Ancient Mine That Is Now Being Worked.

In one of the buffalo hunter reminiscences from a recent book by Pierrette called "Among the Indians," he tells of a dream by which he found his way to the richest gold mine in the world. He had been out on the plains for many days without success in finding game, and was camped for the night on the bank of the Arkansas river, just below the site of the present city of Pueblo. After an hour's sleep he awoke and found that his horse had wandered off, and he set out on foot to find him. Looking up and down the river valley in the darkness he returned to camp at the fire, and prepared for a night's meeting with wolves, panthers, mountain lions and other ravenous beasts that infested the country at that time. On the morrow he resumed his hunt, and walked over hill and dale until 12 o'clock with no success.

Stretching himself under an elm tree that stood near the road he soon fell into a deep sleep, and during that time he dreamed that an old man came to him and told him to go up the river until he found a gulch emptying into the bluffs. "Go up that gulch and, on a large rock you will find your home," said the old man. "The rock under that home is one of the richest deposits of gold on earth, all of which is yours if you go to it."

Until this time the sleeper awoke from his slumbers, arose, and while the dream was fresh commenced the search for his home. One hundred yards from camp along up the valley, he got a view of the gulch which filled the bill of his dreams. Up the gulch he went, and sure enough, on a small hillock rose some thirty feet in height, his home was standing. Settling his horse he looked over the ground, and imbedded in the face of the rock found an old shovel, which had the appearance of having been there for a century or more.

The fulfillment of the dream then got the old man to thinking, and some three days afterward he had visited the settlement, procured tools and was removing the rocks, which proved to be the capping of an old shaft some twenty feet in diameter. The old gentleman toiled until his means of supply were exhausted, and with a heavy heart grounded his tools and put back to the settlements in Fair Play country and recited his story to parties who became interested and sought his claim.

They came out in the fall of 1860 and commenced operations, and spent several thousand dollars in opening up the old shaft, going down as far as sixty feet. From some cause or other the claim was again abandoned, until during the spring the owner came out to the ground and commenced operations. Considerable work has been done, but the bottom of the old shaft has not been reached.

Work was suspended temporarily, the owner, Mr. Graham, having other matters that required his attention, and during this suspension some expert miners, backed by a San Antonio syndicate, purchased the claim, and we are informed that work will be continued and the old lead is fully opened and explored.—Colorado Clipper.

Heavy Chains for Finnish Prisoners.

There is one point in which Finnish prisons take precedence of all others I have visited in Europe, Asia or America. I mean in the chains used thereon and their enormous weight. In two cells of Abo we found a man in each case with terrible irons, weighing in the first case three Finnish lb pounds, or sixty pounds, and in the second case more than a hundredweight. In the latter instance the unfortunate man had four hands round his neck and waist, fastened together by a heavy chain which continued nearly to the ground, and was further attached to two chains securing the ankles. The hands were likewise secured by links riveted to the waistband. I obtained photographs of more than ordinary bad representing the worst, for I have seen also in Finland thick iron anklets pierced with holes, through which is passed an iron bolt thick as a crowbar, and the forty pounds weight of which rests on pads on the footpegs.—Henry Lansdell in Harper's.

The Spider's Poison.

The spider's poison comes from a sac and duct at the base of its mandibles. It nearly resembles the venomous matter secreted by serpents, and is a transparent fluid, containing traces of formic acid and oily albumen. There seems to be nothing characteristic in its microscopic appearance. When it is collected from the poison glands of several spiders and dried it will retain its physiological properties for many years, and even after it has been subjected to a boiling temperature its properties are not destroyed.—London Standard.

Peruvian Barbarity.

The most blood curdlingly cruel thing that has yet come under my observation is the manner in which are obtained the so called "pig skins" that so commonly serve for bottles and casks. They are not the hides of pigs, but those of sheep, and horrible to relate, are pulled off the living animal, the poor sheep being actually skinned alive, or more correctly speaking, skinned dead, for of course he does not survive the operation.—Lima Cor. Pittsburg Dispatch.

Rolling Road Cooks.

Road portable cooks are now being successfully tried in England, the machinery used being of special design and very economical. The cooks are of various sizes, and when empty may be placed one within the other, so as to take up a minimum space in the hold of a vessel.—New York Journal.

Accuracy Note.

A gentleman visiting at the Yonger mansion remarked that the Youngsters were not remarkable for cleanliness, as they neither washed themselves nor their clothes more than once a year.

"Oh, no," said little Tommy Yonger. "Now I tell you was no Dupicate and it was Kenuine."—Tales Siftings.
