Waterbury Makes Some Frank Statements Regarding His Desires—Current Topics in London.

London, March 18.—(Special London letter, copyrighted, 1899, by the Associated Press.)—The event of the week has undoubtedly been the debut here of Mr. Jos. H. Choate, the United States ambassador, as a public speaker at the recent banquet of the association of the chambers of commerce of the United Kingdom. While his speech has been much admired as straight utterance from a self-respecting nation, there is a tinge of disappointment in many quarters. Thus, Mr. David Christie Murray, the novelist and editor of London Morning, says: "We have had the intellectual and spiritual best of America with us for many years, but we have not had the mass of Americans with us and we had no right to expect them. ..."

At the same time Mr. Choate is being feted by the chambers of commerce.
