

EVENING NEWS.

Monday, April 9, 1888.

BEAR LAKE BITS.

It is said that the fish in Bloomington Creek are nearly all dying off, and some people ascribe it to the fish poisoning in the creek from the corals on the banks. This matter should be looked after.

Considerable surprise is manifested in regard to the call for the independent party for a convention of the independent party. Many thought here that we would only have the democratic party in the field this fall. But it will make the democratic party round up their shoulders and prepare for a hard struggle.

There have already been many names presented by the press for the position of Chief Justice. Among them some of the ablest men of the nation. But we take the liberty of suggesting to the President a person that towers (in some respects) above them all, and who is, in one man's opinion (never mind who that man is), greater than them all. That person is our own, our great Chief Justice of Idaho—Hays. Moreover, Cleveland could not take anything from us that we would move willingly part with. Besides it would be good for the judge, and it is a man, who has so successfully solved the vexed "Mormon" problem, is deserving of recognition and promotion. Then, again, he could appoint his son clerk of the court; and, taken altogether, that would be "ducks" for the Hayses. Of course it is against the law for a judge to appoint his son clerk of his court, but his son is clerk of his court in Idaho just the same—Southern Idaho Independent.

A Quaint Little Sermon.

Mr. Harvey was riding slowly along the dusty road, looking in all directions for a stream, or even a house, where he might refresh his tired, thirsty horse with a good draught of water. While he was thinking and wondering, he turned an abrupt corner in the road, and saw before him a comfortable farmhouse, and at the same time a boy ten or twelve years old came out into the road with a small pail, and stood directly before him.

"What do you want, my boy?" said Mr. Harvey, stopping his horse.

"Would your horse like a drink, sir?" said the boy, respectfully.

Mr. Harvey thought little of it, supposing, of course, the boy carried a few pennies in this manner, and, therefore, he offered him a bit of silver, and was astonished to see him refuse it.

"I would like you to take it," he said, looking earnestly at the child, and observing for the first time that he looked slightly queer.

"Indeed, sir, I don't want it. It is little enough I can do for myself or any one. I am lame, and my back is bad, and my mother says no matter how small a favor may seem if it will be a blessing to me, I will do it as much as he does a very large favor. And this is the most I can do for you. You see, sir, the distance from Painesville is eight miles to this spot, and I happen to know there is no stream crossing the road that distance and so, sir, almost everyone passing here from that place is sure to have a thirsty horse."

The Art of Congressing.

A young, handsome, and rich bachelor, who is a member of the house of Representatives, is very anxious to get a bill through Congress providing for a handsome public building in his home town before the convention to nominate his successor shall meet next summer. He knew that success depended upon getting an early report on his bill in both houses, so he promptly set to work to cultivate the acquaintance of members of the Committee on Public Buildings. There was nothing very original in this purpose, but the way he carried it out was so comprehensive and complete that it deserves this advertisement.

He made a scientific study of every one of those men, found out who would be for the bill anyway, or with very little urging, discovered who would be for it, and then he went to the "particular vanity" of each of the other more scrupulous fellows, and sedulously devoted his time, efforts, and money to meeting the wishes of each. One of these men, for example, had a daughter who was not receiving as much attention as her fond parents thought her due. Our young and brilliant Representative became his most diligent and acceptable admirer, sent her flowers and bouquets, took her to the theatre, danced with her, and won her father's vote and her fancy. Needless to say, his bill was favorably reported in both houses, and it has not already passed is certain to do so in the near future. "This business of Congressing," as the Hon. "Tim" Campbell calls it, demands ingenuity and versatility.

The highest recorded balloon ascent was by Glaisher and Coxwell from Wolverhampton, England, on September 27, 1862. They rose to the height of seven miles. According to Glaisher, in 2,500 balloon ascensions only fifteen deaths have occurred.
