There is, however, a broad distinction to be drawn between the melodrams which it re presents, and that which is ordinarily understood by the term. It is a melodrama of refinement, of deep pathos, of keen anguish, of bitter suffering, of brave contention between love and duty, as against up over 200 towns and cities, and reclaiming the forbidding waste places; the peace, order, and quiet-ness that characterize them, have ment, of blatant defiances, and vig-orous vulgarity. The piece is one of surpassing power, of strong situa-tions, of continuous action, and of marvelous effective tableaux.
