An embankment had collapsed, bury-ing two men. To rescue them large parties of other laborers employed along the line were immediately set to work and a wide pit was dug in which were about 50 men, when the over-hanging hillside fell, burying 40 of the laborers under masses of earth. Those who were not buried began to dig out their comrades, while messen-gers were sent to nearby villages ask-ing for help. Several physicians and a large force of workmen were sent to the scene of the disaster. The rescue work, which was continued throughout the night, was dangerous owing to the possibility of fresh masses of earth falling on the laborers.
