British minister's reply:

"Yes, I have read both letters. I have not seen the British minister since he went to Europe last spring until he called on me this morning at the Department of State. Lord Sackville West has no other or better means of the knowledge or the intentions of the President than any one of the sixty five millions of American people. His personal opinion is worth no more than that of any one of them on the ground of knowledge and mach less on the ground of knowledge and mach less on the ground of interest in the subject. While there must be a concurrence of opinion as to the improprigty of the expression of individual views by any one holding the position of foreign envoy, it is still to be hoped we will be able to settle the issues involved in the pending canvass without the importation of fereign interference or intermeddling in our domestic affairs. The American people will be prompt to resent and repel as impertinent any such attempts. But this will easily be recognized as a political pitfall arranged by the California letter with its objects so plainly stamped upon its face and addressed to the British of the Russian squadron at that port, there was a general interchange of international good wishes.

efforts which are being directed to discover the tricksters were instigated by me, and I think I shall succeed in making everything plain."

"At your interview with Secretary Bayard this morning, did you discuss this matter?" asked the reporter.

"O, yes," replied Lerd Sackville, "naturally enough we sliuded to the matter, but not at any length."

"I have nothing to be sorry for, however," said Lord Sackville, "except that I was entrapped. This affair reveals to me a new phase in the ways of American politicians; ways that in this instance are disastrous to me. In other American ways I can delight, me.
