WHAT MAKES A MAN.

Not numerous years nor lengthened life,
Not pretty children and a wife,
Not p ns and chains and fancy rings,
Nor any such like trumpery things;
Nor pipe, cigar, nor bottled wine,
Nor liberty with kings to dine.
Nor coat, nor boots, nor yet a hat,
A dandy vest or trimmed cravat,
Nor all the world's wealth laid in store;
Nor Mister, Rev'rend, Sir, nor Squire,
With titles that t o memory tire;
Nor ancestry traced back to Will,
Who went from Normandy to kill;
Nor Latin, Greek, nor Hebrew lore,
Nor thousand volumes rambled o'er;
Nor Judge's robes nor Mayor's mace,
Nor crowns that deck the royal race—
These all united never can
Avail to make a single man.

A truthful soul, a loving mind,
Full of affection for its kind;
A helper of the human race;
A soul of beauty and of grace;
A spirit form erect and free,
That never basely bends the knee;
That will not bear a feather's weight
Of slavery's chain, for small or great;
That truly speaks of God within,
And never makes a league with sin;
That snaps the fetters despots make,
And loves the truth for its own sake;
That wors ips God and him alone;
That trembles at no tyrant's nod—
A soul tha fears no one but God,
And thus can smile at curse and ban—
That is the soul that makes the man.

RUSKIN ON AMERICAN TOURISTS IN ITALY.

In the letter which Mr. Ruskin has addressed to the working classes of England, he sketches some people whom he met when going from Venice to Verona by an afternoon train. He writes:

"In the carriage with me were two American girls with their father and mother, people of the class which has lately made so much money suddenly, and does not know what to do with it; and these two girls, of about fifteen and eighteen, had evidently been indulged in everything (since they had had the means) which Western civilization could imagine. And here they were, specimens of the utmost which the money and invention of the nineteenth century could produce in maidenhood—children of the most progressive race—enjoying the full advantages of political liberty, of enlightened philosophical education, of cheap pilfered literature, and of luxury at any cost. Whatever money, machinery, or freedom of thought could do for these two children had been done. No superstition had deceived, no restraint degraded them—types, they could not but be of maidenly wisdom and felicity, as conceived by the forwardest intellects of our time. And they were travelling through a district which, if any in the world, should touch the hearts and delight the eyes of young girls. Between Venice and Verona! Portia's villa perhaps in sight upon the Brenta—Juliet's tomb to be visited in the evening—blue against the Southern sky, the hills of Petrarch's home. Exquisite midsummer sunshine, with low rays, glanced through the vine leaves; all the Alps were clear, from the Lake of Garda to Cadore, and to farthest Tyrol. What a princess's chamber this if those are princesses, and what dreams might they not dream therein. But the two American girls were neither princesses, nor seers, nor dreamers. By infinite self-indulgence they had reduced themselves simply to two pieces of white putty that could feel pain. The flies and the dust stuck to them as to clay, and they perceived, between Venice and Verona, nothing but the flies and the dust. They pulled down the blinds the moment they entered the carriage, and then sprawled, and writhed, and tossed among the cushions of it, in vain contest, during the whole fifty miles, with every miserable sensation of bodily affliction that could make time intolerable. They were dressed in thin white frocks, coming vaguely open at the backs as they stretched or wriggled; they had French novels, lemons, and lumps of sugar to beguile their state with; the novels hanging together by the ends of a string that had once stitched them, or adhering at the corners in densely bruised dog's ears, out of which the girls, wetting their fingers, occasionally extricated a gluey leaf. From time to time they cut a lemon open, ground a lump of sugar backwards and forwards over it till every fibre was in a treacly pulp; then sucked the pulp and gnawed the white skin into leathery strings, for the sake of its bitter. Only one sentence was exchanged in the fifty miles on the subject of things outside the carriage (the Alps being once visible from a station where they had drawn up the blinds)—"Don't those snow-caps make you cool?" "No; I wish they did." And so they went their way, with sealed eyes and tormented limbs, their numbered miles of pain."

CHARLES MATHEWS the elder and Tattersall were very intimate, and the great comedian was frequently in the habit of accompanying his friend to New Market, where, on one occasion, Mathews indulged in his well known taste for mimicry, at the expense of Tattersall, during a sale of blooded stock conducted by the latter.

"The first lot, gentlemen," said Mr. Tattersall, "is a bay filly by Smolensko," etc.

"The first lot, gentlemen," echoed Mr. Mathews, in precisely the same tone of voice, "is a bay filly by Smolensko," etc.

The auctioneer looked somewhat annoyed, but proceeded:

"What shall we say to begin with?"

"What shall we say to begin with?" replied the echo.

Still endeavoring to conceal his vexation, Mr. Tattersall inquiringly called out, "One hundred guineas?"

"One hundred guineas," echoed Matthews.

"Thank you, sir," cried Tattersall, bringing down the hammer; "the filly is yours."

Matthews was considerably taken aback by his sudden acquisition of "blooded stock," and the company enjoyed the joke immensely.

THE gentle editor of a Western exchange makes the amende honorable in the following elaborate style: There is a fly in our office, one particularly aggressive fly, distinguished from his brethren by a pertinacity and untiring energy that, if properly directed, are enough to make him President. Other flies we can dispose of by whisking a paper at them, or putting them out of the window; but this fly we can't manage. We don't like to kill flies. There is something so confiding about them that it seems like a breach of hospitality to kill them. That fly tumbles into our inkstand, crawls out and dries his little feet by walking over our paper as we write. The compositor has hard work to decipher our manuscript sometimes. And in this connection, we would make a slight correction. In the last number of our paper we called the Hon. Mr. ——— "an unprincipled demagogue;" we should have said "a high toned patriot." It was all the fault of that fly. The brother of the Hon. Mr. ——— came into our office this morning with a new and substantial looking cane, and reminded us of the misprint.
