DENVER, Colorado,

June 7, 1883. Editor Descret News:

Upon closing my letter to you yes terday, we had just commenced our descent of the eastern slope of the ever fameus "Rocky Mountains, far above Arkansas' fountains, etc." as we used to sing thirty-seven years ago, when exiled from our home and journeying towards the land of our promised rest. The Grand Cauyon of the Atkansas, although not varying in scenery to the extent of the Black Canyon of the Gonnison, presents a scene and produces a sensation more thrilling than anything it has been my lot heretofore to experience, (when, except a passage 1 once made through the Grand Canyon of the Colorado some years since, in an old scow, in company with six others, over numerous rapids, fearing our frail tub-like boat, would be dashed to places every few minutes, while the precipitous mountains towering up on either side, thousands of feet, the holes in the rocks studded with flowers of varied hues and in great variety and profusion, and that early in January). Passengers who wished were invited to take seats in an ob-HENRY'S Carbolle Salve allays servation car at the rear of the train,
