that part of the bill proposing new legislation with regard to jurors, supervisors of elections, etc. He asked why the discussion had been thrust upon the country, the legislation proposed being very simple portions of the laws enacted during and since the late war. He had watched the discussion in order to arrive at the motive which prompted it, and was now satisfied that a party in this country had entered upon a well or rather ill considered but determined purpose of reopening sectional agitation, which so long disturbed the people, with the view of consolidating one section of the benefit of party, without reference to the public good. If the bill should become law it, would not affect in any degree the legislation previous to 1865. If the majority in Congress declare from this time forward that the army and navy shall not interfere with elections, they but re-enact what the custom and law were before the act of 365.

A. The country was to be told that the owwer of government to enforce democrats wanted to destroy the power of government to enforce laws. The speech of the senator from Vermont ought to be studied, as it showed great questions of dif-

ou great issues which the democratic party would meet with moderation but firmness. The republicass will, he repeated, resort to a veto because they want the military force to control elections in order to keep themselves in power. Hill affirmed that the tremendous content was a paper. The letter was a paper. The letter was a paper and the remember of the coming o that the tremendous contest now before the country had its origin and meaning in the purpose of the republicans to obtain absolute con-trol of the States by force, whether the pople are willing or not. The senator from New York (Conkling) had pointed out the number of senators and representatives who were in the confederate service, say-

Conkling asked when?

Hill replied, till it came and then they stood up in that dark hour like men for their convictions. They had no spology to make. Of the ninty-three southern representatives and senators about seventy-five were opposed to secession. He mentioned this for the purpose of showing how the southern people are. They are willing to be represented by men true to us. Hill then related some of his personal history to show how hostile he had been to secession. While forty-five others were rejoicing that the south had seceded, his room was dark, his heart sad, and his tongue silent. In 1868 he had a correspondence with that great and good man, Horace Greeley, who did more to build up the republican party than any other man in America. Greeley was honest in his convictions and boldly declared them. In his letter to that gentleman, in reply to something that had been said conto that gentleman, in reply to something that had been said concerning him, he wrote that he was entitled to an audience of the readers of the Tribunc, having, in the winter of 1850, warned the people entitled to an audience of the reads ange of any Constitutional amendment and Red Wood Shingles.

to avert the war, while the north tried to bring it on. He (Hill) knew the republicans claimed to have saved the Union, but if there had been no republican party the Union would not have been in forence between the two great parties now struggling for the mastery. If the President should approve the bill he would for a second time in his administration show himself worthy of the position he holds, but if he should veto the bill for party ends, the time would come when the two parties would be face to face the two parties would be face to face with the Stars and Stripes—the flag of their country.

Union would have been no secession, no returning boards nor electoral commissions. If you must have war they would maintain their rights in the Union; but he should veto the bill for party ends, the time would be no war. The bill prohibiting the presence of military at places of election was presented as enrolled, was signed by the Speaker, and was sent for the signature of the president pro tem, of the Benate. At the expiration of the morning bour consideration was resumed of the Warner silver bill. Kelly said it was not specially discreditable to him that he did know that the puronetise the standard silver dollar when neither the President who signed the bill, nor members of his cabinet were aware of it. Kelly in the course of his speech, declared himself free to admit that when, in '72, he absurdedly asserted that the unit of the United States monetary system, the legal tender silver dollars, which was at that time worth three cents more than the gold dollar, was subsidiary coin, he knew no more on the subject of finance than was known on it to-day by the gentleman from Massachusetts, Claffin, or than his colleague, Fisher. He saw in the present decade symptoms which had marked the fall of the Roman empire, among the concurring causes of which were successive expansions and contractions of currency, and the decline of silver and gold mines of Italy, Spain and Greece. He predicted that the remonetization of silver in the Unit-

States and Europe would restore peace and order and prosperity UTAH DIRECTORY throughout the world.
