Important to Searchers of Genealogy.
[The following matter was recently published in the News, but as there were some errors in it and it is of great importance, it is republished corrected, by general request.]
Editor Deseret News:
As I have been gathering genealogical and historical data of my ancestors in doing so have visited England, Wales and Ireland, and have been somewhat successful in getting considerable information, and believing that it might be of interest to many of the numerous readers of the Deseret News, I cheerfully submit the following statement:
At the general registration office at Somerset House, London, I learned that the Duttons came over to England from Normandy and that Sir Walter Dutton moved to Ireland and settled, calling the place Mount Dalton. This was in the twelfth century. From this house sprang the Duttons of Ireland. No one was known to Dalton, so I got an interview with the assistant register general of the Somerset House, Ireland, and by the name of Robert E. Maitland, whom I found to be a very genial gentleman. I learned from him the roles of the office relative to searching the records for names of friends. A fee of £1 is exacted by the office for six hours' time on the morning of the day, the six hours being considered a day's work. As I expected to collect quite a number of names, and knowing that I would have to employ clerks to make extracts, I concluded to get as many as could work for me on that day. I had with me five clerks and experienced lady clerks, agreeing to give them four shillings and sixpence each day to extract the names of Duttons and twenty-five names each; and if they extracted more names than the number agreed upon, they should receive pay for the extra going rate. My clerks averaged no less than six names each, which gave me 750, at an expense of £1 office fee and £1 clerk hire, making a total expense per day of £275, an average cost of but 15 cents per name. I have a good understanding with the office to get all my work and any of my friends' work done at the same figures. From the last information I can give you is much cheaper than in the Somerset House, where the cost is about six cents per name. All principal names are given in full, and the general office found in Ireland. I procured a book containing of two thousand principal names which are spelled in different ways in different districts in Ireland. This book proved to be a good guide in hunting given names and locating them in the respective districts, enabling the searching parties to open up a correspondence where it is deemed necessary. Now, if I could be of any use in furnishing information to any friend on the foregoing subject I shall have great pleasure in so doing without money consideration.
About the year 1887 a law was enacted by the British parliament compelling parents to register their children, and since that time the registers of the districts where they reside, under pains and penalties for neglecting to do so. This law of names are gathered in the different districts of the nation, the law having been in full operation in Ireland since 1884. I was also advised that there was another office in Dublin Castle where the pedigree of all persons residing in Ireland, with their coat of arms, could be obtained, £20.00 being the fee exacted in my case. There are two register districts in the county of Dublin, all of which have to report to the register general's office where the facts are again recorded, so it will be seen that a search in the principal office will save a person the trouble of travelling over the country.
I am of the opinion that similar arrangements could be made with the register general's office at Somerset House, London. M. W. Dutton, Walsby, New York City, U.S.A.
P. S.—Edwin Edward Dutton of Salt Lake City and T. W. Brewerton of this place were my first cousins, and their marriages and deaths filed up. They are much pleased with the information and take much interest therein. M. W. D.

THE ART OF SPEAKING STORIES.
Many women think they are great artists in having things that they do not need, simply because they are cheap. They will buy two cheap gowns instead of one good one, which is the poorest sort of economy. When a woman buys a dress, she should buy a dress that will last her. A woman should make up her mind what she will wear before she goes to a shopping expedition. It is a good idea to have a dress that will last her. It is a good idea to have a dress that will last her. It is a good idea to have a dress that will last her.

THE GIRL WITH NO TALENT.
Among the long list of girls who perhaps do not deserve the distinction of a whole chapter in the story, there is one who always looks for her talent. Every woman who is a possible talent until she has stood long and thoughtful has by the time she is old, in order to remember to the value of her talent. It is a good idea to have a dress that will last her. It is a good idea to have a dress that will last her. It is a good idea to have a dress that will last her.
