The fosse, or ditch was dry. Orsini began to walk round in search of a place to scale the outer wall. He had provided himself with a small rope, which he had found one day, and also with a strong nail. Passing under an arch leading into the city, he crept on through marsh and mud, until he reached a place where he thought he might scale the wall. He drove his nail in and put his left foot upon it, then tried to raise himself by clinging to the broken bricks above. But he had not raised his body six inches, when pain and exhaustion overcame him, and he fell back powerless. Up to this moment his courage had sustained him, in spite of suffering and difficulties. But now he was quite indifferent. He knew he would be taken, chained up, and executed. He did not care. - He was quite resigned. He lay down in the ditch and went fast asleep. After an hour's sleep, he swoke, the pain in his leg being intolerable. His courage returned. Day was near dawning, and if he could get any one to pull him out of the ditch, he might yet escape. At 5 a.m. the bridge gates were opened and the people in the city began to move. A young man passed. Orsini called to him, saying that he had got drunk the night before, and could not get out of the ditch; but the fellow only stared and walked on. Two men passed. Orsini made the same entreaty to them. They shrugged their shoulders, and said:

> SAGACITY OF DOGS .- Among many curious, yet well authenticated anecdotes, illustrating the pay in Nails or work in his shop. wonderful sagacity or reasoning powers of the canine race, the following deserves place: A large Newfoundland dog belonged to the captain of a ship engaged in the trade between Novia Scotia and Greenock. On one occasion the captain 1852 and 1853. brought from Halifax a beautiful cat, which formed a particular acquaintance with Rover; and these two animals of such different natures were almost inseparable during the passage. On arriving at Greenock, the cat was presented by the captain to a lady of his acquaintance, who resided near half a mile from the quay, in whose occasionally visited by her friend and fellow passenger, Rover, who seemed not a little displeased at the separation which had taken place between them. On the day, however, when 'he ship was to leave the port for another voyage, the usual bustle on board gave Rover a hint of what was going on, and he decided on his course of conduct children's chairs, tables, lounges, bedsteads, &c. He jumped on shore, made his last visit to puss, seized her in his teeth, much to her astonishment, and carried her though the streets to the quay, carriage and a spring buggy, will take stock in exchange. just as the ship was about hauling off. He made a spring, cleared the gun whale, and fairly shipped his feline friend in good order and well condition- THE undersigned would respectfully ed, in and upon the good ship Nancy, of Greenock; and then ran to his master, wagging his tail, adjoining counties, that persons wishing Grinding done as if entreating that she might remain on board.

"Povero Signor, we shall only get ourselves into trouble by helping you."

It was a quarter to six. At six the cells were visited, and Orsini's escape would be discovered. His footsteps in the mud would enable them to track him easily enough. It was hard to get thus far and fai'.

A stout peasant lad passed. In a voice of agony Orsini called to him for help, and threw him the end of the cord. The boy took it and pulled with a will. But he was not strong enough. After a tremendous effort, Orsini fell back.

"Call another man!" he shouted, being desperate.

It was Sunday morning, and many peasants were astir. A stout man suddenly appeared, and took hold of the cord. Both pulled with might and main, and raised Orsini high enough for them to catch his arms just as his strength was giving way. He was beside them in a moment.

"Understand," said he, "what you have done: I am a political prisoner."

lowed, limping, as best he could. Round the castle of St. George are cane brakes. About the very minute that the stupefied turnkeys were gazing at the several bars in his cell, Orsini plunged up to his middle into one of these all day. What became of him afterward it is ply to not yet safe to tell. Suffice it to say that, though the Austrian police made as much noise about him as if he had been an Emperor, he escaped, and is now an exile in England.

involved in more conspiracies. Men of his character never learn, never change.

In the last news from Italy is an incident which throws light on the production of such men as Orsini.

An Austrian colonel was the other day galloping through the country, near a small town in the Legations. He was followed by a large dog. He happened to meet an Italian boy who had a small hound with him. The colonel's dog flew at this hound and was tearing him in pieces when the owner seized a stone, and, throwing it perhaps with more strength and better aim than he intended, killed the larger dog on the spot.

The colonel in a fury had the boy arrested and bastinadoed. The pain and concentrated rage were such that the boy died on the cavaletto.

Next day the colonel was sitting among a group of officers at a cafe smoking cigars. A man suddenly appeared, approached the colonel, dealt him three or four swift and mortal blows with a knife, and dashed away safely. Nothing was known of him except that he was on the cavaletto.
