

WILLIAMS SAID HE WAS GUILTY.

Entered Fenton Residence, Pleads
Guilty to Another Offense.

GOT MIXED UP ON NAMES.

After Plea is Taken Discovered that Defendant had been Arraigned for a Namesake's Crime.

George Williams, a morphine fiend, appeared before Judge Norrell this morning for arraignment on the charge of housebreaking. Williams pleaded guilty, not to the crime for which he was held to answer by Justice Timmony, but to an information charging Frank Williams with the same offense. The latter is a young boy arrested by the police on the 6th of January last charged with having entered the room of Peter Lux in the Roberts house on Broadway and taking a compass and cuff and collar buttons belonging to the roomer. He was held to the district court and has been in the county jail since January 8th awaiting the action of Judge Norrell.

George Williams, the man who appeared in court this morning, is about 35 years old. He was arrested on February 10th by Officer E. C. Davies on the charge of entering the rooming house of S. P. Fenton at 65 north second west street, and taking a suit of clothes. He was taken before Justice Timmony and waived preliminary examination. Ever since his arrest, he has announced his willingness to plead guilty to housebreaking and throw himself upon the mercy of the court.

With the understanding that he would plead guilty he was this morning brought into court, and the fact that he pleaded guilty to an offense that he was in no way connected with goes to prove that he was ready to plead guilty to almost anything the prosecuting officers chose to accuse him of.

The information against young Frank Williams was filed in the district court February 7. The transcript in the case of George Williams was received on February 24, while the Benbrook trial was in progress, and for that reason no information was filed against him.

Yesterday afternoon Deputy County Attorney Ray Van Cott notified Clerk F. W. Little that George Williams would be arraigned today and told him to have the papers ready.

The name of Williams sounded quite familiar to Clerk Little, and when court opened this morning he was on hand with the information filed against Frank Williams, the only person by that name whose case the county attorney's office had informed against.

When the defendant Williams was requested by Judge Norrell to stand up and be arraigned, Clerk Little inquired of him if his true name was Frank Williams.

"No, sir," replied the defendant, "my true name is George Williams."

"I see," said the clerk as he took a pen behind his right ear, and made an interjection in the information. The clerk then replaced the pen and, clearing his throat, read the document, commencing with: "State of Utah vs. Frank Williams, whose true name is George Williams." The defendant listened attentively to the recital, and when asked by the court if he wished to enter his plea instantly or take the statutory time, replied: "Yes, your honor, I plead guilty."

Judge Norrell then inquired of Williams if he desired to waive time for sentence, but the defendant evidently did not know what that meant, so the court ordered that he be brought in Friday morning.

Some time after court adjourned it dawned upon Prosecutor Van Cott that the wrong person had been arraigned, and that Williams had pleaded guilty to an offense committed by another.

As the matter now stands Williams will have to undergo another arraignment, which will be on Friday morning, at which time Judge Norrell expects to sentence him.

There was quite a laugh among the court officials when the mistake was discovered, and it was agreed among them not to say a word to the newspaper reporters, and they didn't.

YOUNG GIRLS IN COURT.

Eva Jasperson Thought to be Insane
—The Other Sent to Orphan's Home.

Eva Jasperson, charged with incoherence and truancy, appeared before Judge Norrell today to show cause why she should not be sent to the State industrial school for reformation. From a statement made to the court by Attorney Ray Van Cott it would appear that the defendant is not in her right senses, and it was ordered that she be examined as to her sanity. The girl is twelve years old, and is said to be wholly irresponsible for her actions, which at times are quite vicious.

SENT TO THE ORPHANS' HOME.

Ida Shimming is the name of another young girl who appeared before the court today upon the charge of petty larceny. Her offense consisted of stealing a bicycle of the value of $40. In the police court she pleaded guilty, and was thereupon bound over by Justice Timmony to await the action of Judge Norrell. The child was ordered sent to the Orphans' Home and Day Nursery, during good behavior and pleasure of court.

Probate Orders.

The following orders in probate matters were made by Clerk Blair today:

THIRD DISTRICT COURT TO RECOVER ON THREE CAUSES OF ACTION, THE SUM OF $6,500, ALLEGED TO BE DUE ON CERTAIN PROMISSORY NOTES MADE IN FAVOR OF S. B. CHICK AND A. E. ROE, AND ASSIGNED TO PLAINTIFF.

A NEW HOTEL PROJECT.

Fred Wey and Some Montana Men Buy a Fine Site.

It is Situated Near the Union Depot Grounds and Faces Pioneer Square Park—Will Build at Once.

A number of projects of more or less importance that have been held in abeyance pending final action on the Union Depot plan, are now being closed up.

One of these projects is for a new hotel. Fred Wey was the originator of this scheme, and some time ago he interested several Montana men of means in it. An option was secured on a lot facing Pioneer square on Third South and having a frontage of 140 feet. This deal has just been closed, the cash paid, and Mr. Wey and his associates now own the property. Plans will at once be obtained and the work of construction commenced. The hotel is to be a handsome structure, and fronting the park, will be in a desirable locality.

The sale was made through McGurkin & Co.

Mr. Wey when found by a "News" man this afternoon said that he would not state who was backing him. It was sufficient to say that it was Montana money that was going into the enterprise and that the building of the hotel would begin just as soon as the Union depot was well under way. It will be a building, "said Mr. Wey," that will be imposing enough to shut out competition in that section.

The number of stories or its cost is not now stated. The purchase price was about $100 per foot or a little more than $10,000. Mr. McGurkin was the owner of the property.

WATCH WELL YOUR HOUSES

Another Bold Daylight Robbery Has Been Committed.

Richard W. Madsen's Home Entered Yesterday Afternoon and $200 of Property Stolen.

Another family is suffering from the visit of daring robbers. Between 4 and 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, the home of Richard W. Madsen, No. 647 east First South street, was ransacked by thieves and about $200 worth of jewelry and silverware purloined.

About 4:30 Mrs. Madsen locked the house and went for a walk with the dog. The robbers entered the house at 4 o'clock, but did not enter the house immediately after returning. She walked around the yard several times, but noticed nothing that would indicate a burglar's visit. When she entered the house Mrs. Madsen found the contents of bureau drawers strewn about the floor, and various pieces of furniture turned over.

The thieves had stolen six pearl nut pickers, one pearl nut cracker, six pearl fruit knives, a pair of pearl opera glasses, a lady's gold neck chain, and a lady's gold watch with diamond setting, of the value of $100. The articles taken are worth fully $200. It is believed that entrance was made through the cellar, but a small boy who was playing in the neighborhood asserts that he saw three men unlock the front door and enter. The robbers took but few chances as they unlocked the front door in the yard to guard against being locked in, and also to furnish a number of avenues for escape.

As soon as the matter was reported to the police, officers were detailed on the case.

JUDGE TIMMONY'S COURT.

Frank Rogers was accused of being hopelessly intoxicated yesterday and today in the district court. He was charged with being drunk and I was never seen before.

"How long since you were here before?" inquired the court.

"I don't know," replied Rogers. "I was drunk and I was never seen before."

"Where do you belong?"

"At Murray, sir; I work for the Rio Grande Western on the grade."

"What are they grading at Murray?"

"They are straightening out the curves, I think."

Judge Timmony smiled and told Rogers to go and not come back.

AMUSEMENTS.

It has only been three months since "Pudd'head Wilson" was seen in Salt Lake, and that fact added to insufficient advertising, is responsible for the small turnout at the Theater last evening.

Even though deprived of the presence of Edwin Mayo, whose Pudd'head was the heart and soul of the piece, as his father had been before him, the play remains one of the most charming and ingenious which has ever been written, and in the hands of the strong company which Mrs. Mayo furnishes, it makes up a most agreeable evening's entertainment.

It would not be true to say that Mr. McIntosh is an ideal successor to the Mayo. He plays yet as though he cannot help being more or less disappointing. The play is still filled with character gems: Mr. Campeau as the villain Tom, and Mr. McKay as Sheriff Blake, might almost star in those roles.

It is pleasant to see Mrs. Mayo back in her old part of Roxie, in which she is thoroughly charming. The new Roxie, Miss Morris, is an excellent actress, and the others of the cast are fully capable.

Yielding to the request of Mr. Pyper, the company has consented to prolong its stay one night, and the play will be seen again this evening.

The next attraction at the Theater will be the famous Denham Thompson in his own play, "The Old Homestead." Though the play has often been done here before, it is years since Mr. Thompson has been in the city, and without doubt he will be given a royal welcome.

The Gray opera people are in Salt Lake this week resting, preliminary to their opening next Monday night at the Grand. Mr. Gray says the season has been one of unparalleled popularity. He is confident that the record will be kept up in Salt Lake. The feature of the repertory this year will be the Wang, with which the three weeks' engagement is to end on Friday night. The advance sale will begin tomorrow evening.

He says that there is an unconsciousness among eastern politicians at the present time. He also thinks which seems to be the prospect.

Mr. Tarbet expressed himself as being highly pleased that he was elected as a

THE MERITS OF THE SEVEN DEVILS

Mineral, Heath and Seven Devils District Compared.

FORMATION IS IDENTICAL.

Ore and Gangue Occurs in Chutes—Mineralization of Veins in Lines Parallel With Granite Contact.

Somewhat varied reports have been circulated concerning the Seven Devils country as a coming mining center. The following article dated from Weiser, and published by the Spokane Spokesman-Review may have some interest locally, containing as it does what appears to be a good description of the formation of the country. The article is as follows:

When a new mining district comes into prominence the people on the outside desire to know what is the formation, in order in a measure to judge as to the probable outcome of development. There has been for years much contention as to the value of the mineral belt so pronounced in this, Washington county, and many have held that its merit was ephemeral. There has never been a technical description of it in print, so at this time, when strikes of more than ordinary moment are being recorded, to briefly exploit the formation of the districts with a little reliable geological information of a reliable nature, may not come in amiss. There can be no separation of the districts of the Seven Devils, for while they are wide apart they are an integral portion of the same range, and of practically the same mineralogical and geological conditions. The range of mountains from a short distance north of Weiser to the farthest end of the county take them all in, beginning with the Mineral district, then the Heath and then the Seven Devils.

The main features of these three districts are identical. They are all on the east side of the Snake river, and from it distant about four miles, with their base along the stream, they have angle slopes of about 30 degrees, and to the east of the Snake river, they extend and extending northward to the mouth of the Salmon river, and extending in a north and south direction. The formation on the west is a metamorphosed mica schist as the groundwork while on the east it is granite. Above both is a heavy layer of basalt, extending to the east generally and forming the country from Middle valley to the Salmon river; while beneath the basalt comes a vast area of granite which extends eastward in almost a continuous body through the Salmon meadows to the Sawtooth range. All have bodies of porphyry of various kinds formed as intruding dikes and which have been at least in part the cause of the mineralization. The basaltic flows have run eastward in sheets from north and south fissures many miles long, arising near the crests of the range, and have been covered by a series of basaltic flows of various thickness up to 3,000 feet. Some of these flows are so recent that hot springs still exist near them. Probably none of them are earlier than the tertiary. The same kind of sheet flows of basalt formed the Snake plains between Boise and Pocatello, and are peculiar to the Snake river regions of Idaho, Oregon and Washington. One of these flows from the Eagle Valley mountains lies in the valley of the Snake at least 4,000 feet deep, changing its course and compelling it to eat out a new channel, cutting away the schist along the eastern side of the Snake, which is now the Snake river canyon.

Another such flow from the northern end of the Seven Devils cut off the lower six miles of the Rapid river valley, leaving the upper six miles of the valley. The flow of the Rapid river, the Salmon river, and filled it with a few feet deep, forcing the river to cut its way eastward some three miles till it emptied into the Little Salmon, through the schist. The damming of the Snake below Huntington formed a vast lake, whose limits extended far into Oregon and southern Idaho, reached as far north as Council, Idaho, and extended eastward some distance beyond Boise. The shores of this lake were covered with rank vegetation composed of forests of willows, cottonwoods, maples, etc., the waters were still and deposited very much clay and sand in beds and in places extensive areas of tripple, and fine clay. Many flows of basalt occurred while the lake existed, and probably a few after the Snake had cut its canyon and so drained the lake.

The granite contact with the schist runs near the crest of the range and a little east of north, and with a few exceptions is entirely barren of pay mineral. Near this contact, however, either in the granite or the schist, are located all the large deposits of pay ore, except in the Vaughn, River Queen, etc.

If a single region is taken it is almost impossible to discover the cause of the mineralization, but if we take all the Seven Devils together it is not difficult to find a cause, or cause. We find that nearly all the veins run east of north, that they cannot be traced for any great distance continuously, that all the ore and gangue occurs in chutes and cuts of porphyry can be traced for short distances only in the vicinity of some of the leading mines, entirely disappear farther on and again crop up beyond. These facts in connection with the character of the gangue lead us to say that the mineralization of the veins in this region occurs in lines parallel with the granite contact, or in series of parallel veins, with occasional cross veins, and that these veins have been formed at different times and by different agencies.

There are two distinct series of veins in the schist—those parallel with the granite contact, and those intersected with the schist. The latter are always composed of white quartz, are of varying thickness, rarely over four feet, are as crooked as ram's horns, and faulted in all sorts of ways. They occasionally carry gold in rich pockets of small size, and are probably simple cases of infiltration. They never have porphyry with them, but often have considerable micaceous iron. The North Star at the head of Rapid river is one of these veins.
